CLERICAL, MEDICAL, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.

In addition to the ordinary Assurance of Healthy Lives, this Society, early in the year 1824, originated the plan of granting Policies on the Lives of Persons more or less deviating from the standard of health. Having issued one-fourth of the whole number of Policies on Lives of that description, the Board have recently caused a careful investigation into this branch of the business to be made. The result of this investigation has proved highly satisfactory as to the past, and encouraging for the future. The data derived from long experience in this class of cases, and exclusively available by this Society, enable the Directors to state with confidence their conviction that the system now adopted by them for assuring Invalid Lives is as safe and beneficial as that upon which the scale for Healthy Lives is constructed.

BONUSES.

The two first Divisions averaged 22l. per Cent. on the Premiums paid. The Third, 28l. per Cent. The Fourth Bonus, declared January, 1847, averaged rather more than 36l. per Cent.; and, from the large amount of Profit reserved for future appropriation, and other causes, the Bonuses hereafter are expected considerably to EXCEED that Amount. The Society's Income, which is steadily INCREASING, is now upwards of 122,000l. per annum.

This Society presents the following Advantages to the Assured:—First.—The security of a large subscribed Capital.

Second.—Exemption of the Assured from all liability.

Third.—Tables of Premiums calculated on the true law of mortality, expressly for this Office, and affording particular advantages to young lives.

Fourth.—Participating and Non-participating Scales of Premiums: the former the Assured are entitled to EIGHTY PER CENT. or FORTY-FIFTHS of the profits divided amongst them periodically, either by way of addition to the sum assured, or in diminution of Premium, at the option of the Assured.

Fifth.—No deduction is made from the four-fifths of the profits belonging to the Assured for interest on Capital, or Guarantee Fund.

Sixth.—No Policy disputed, except in case of fraud.

Seventh.—This Society gives a much larger share of profits to the Assured, and at a lower rate of Premium than the great majority of the Life Offices.

Eighth.—Parties wishing to assure their lives without participating in the profits can do so on a lower scale of Premiums than that of a large proportion of other Offices.

LONDON, JULY 8, 1848.

THE memorial of the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association, (printed in THE JURIST, ante, p. 251), contains some very good, and some objectionable suggestions, for the reform of Chancery pleading and practice. As the questions raised are very important to the Profession, we propose to examine them seriatim.

The first proposal is, that when all parties consent, the courts of equity should be at liberty to exercise a jurisdiction on petition, in all cases whatsoever, so as to supersede the necessity of bill, answers, and evidence on interrogatory.

The second is, that the practice of allowing special cases for the opinion of the Court (after the manner of the Common Law Courts) should be applied to Courts of Equity.

And the third is, that a consequential modification of the practice of ordering inquiries for parties, or taking accounts should take place.

To the first of these propositions there seems really nothing to object. When all necessary parties are competent to consent and do consent, all that they want from the Court is, its decision upon a state of facts, admitted, or proved; and if the mode of proof is satisfactory to the parties, it cannot be of the least consequence to the Court, what that mode is. Under such circumstances, to impose on one party the necessity of eliciting from the other, in a given artificial manner, admissions which he is perfectly ready to make, without any questions being asked, is simply to crush substance under the weight of forms. Wherever the parties are amicable and competent, all the admitted facts can as well be stated by petition as in any other mode; and all the contested facts can as well be proved by affidavit in any other way. The difficulty, apparently the only difficulty, would be, in ascertaining that all necessary parties do consent. But there does not seem to us much in this. At present, when the cause is first heard, whether on bill and answer only, or on evidence, an inquiry is directed, if it appears necessary, to see whether all proper parties are before the Court, or to take accounts. This may as well be done on a petition being heard, as on a cause being heard, as the necessity for inquiry would appear as much on the face of a petition as it would on bill, answer, and evidence shewing the same matter. An objection presents itself, that if the result of the inquiry should shew that parties were not present who had a right to be present, and all or some of whom were not sui juris, the matter could not of course be dealt with on petition. This objection would be removed by allowing the parties in such a case to amend their pleadings by converting the petition into a bill, and allowing the evidence taken in support of the petition, to be used in support of and against those parties who were originally competent and consenting parties. Of course we assume that the gentlemen recommending the alteration in question, entertain no such idea under their third proposition, as to dispense with the presence of any parties interested; or to leave it to the parties appearing on the petition to determine in any manner, without an inquiry under the direction of the Court, whether all proper parties are present, in any case where, on the face of the pleadings and other matters presented to the Court, it appears that parties not represented may be in existence. If they mean anything so wild as that, then we beg to dissent altogether from their view. But if their proposition is such as we have above supposed it to be, then we repeat that we cannot see in it anything but what is very practicable, and very beneficial to suitors.

The second proposition, viz. to allow the practice of special cases in equity, seems equally admissible. The practice at law on this point is regulated by the 24th clause of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, which enacts, "that it shall be lawful for the parties in any action or information, after issue joined by consent, and by order of any of the judges of the said Superior Courts, to state the facts of the case in the form of a special case for the opinion of the Court, and to agree that a judgment shall be entered for the plaintiff or defendant by confession or of nolle prosequi immediately after the decision of the case, or otherwise, as the Court may think fit, and judgment shall be entered accordingly."

There are many cases in equity, both friendly and hostile, in which, on the coming in of the answers, it is found that all or most of the material facts are admitted; and all that remains to be done is the determination of a question of law arising upon those facts. To such cases the machinery of a special case seems peculiarly applicable. The frequent necessity, however, in Chancery suits, of inquiries as to parties, and taking preliminary accounts, would much detract from the utility of a power of taking the opinion of the Court on a special case. For, of course, with reference to this proposition, as well as to the first, it would be out of the question to dispense with an inquiry, under the direction of the Court, as to parties, in cases, in which, on the face of the pleadings, it should appear that there might be parties interested, not before the Court. Then, of course, that inquiry would have to precede the framing of the special case. If it should turn out that there were parties necessary to be before the Court, and those parties should either be incompetent to consent, or should refuse to consent, there would be an end of the special case, and the parties would then have to go into evidence; and this inconvenience would attend such a course of proceedings, that the inquiries would have to be directed before going into evidence. Now, it does sometimes happen, that the course the inquiries take is very much dependent upon matters coming out only in the evidence, and not apparent at all upon either the bill or answers. So that the Court might miscarry, if it were to permit a special case, on the assumption that all proper parties were before it, founding that assumption on the result of a reference made before evidence had been gone into. On the whole, it may be doubted whether, if the third suggestion were entertained at all, it would not be advisable to confine its application to cases where, on the face of the pleadings, it appears clearly that there cannot be any parties requisite who are not before the Court.

The fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, and eighth propositions go to giving the Masters a primary jurisdiction in a variety of matters in which at present the primary application is to the Court, and the Master acts only by way of reference. The fourth proposes such a primary jurisdiction in matters of equitable account when the accounting parties consent to submit to it, and that it shall be either absolute subject only to appeal, or that it shall require confirmation and further direction by the Court. In its present form we have little opinion of this proposition. To be useful to any material extent, it should be compulsory. If it cannot prudently be made compulsory, it will be better to leave the practice as it is. But we cannot see why a primary jurisdiction, compulsory on the parties, should not be given to the Masters in certain cases of account and of the other matters referred to by the propositions now under consideration. The principle regulating the extent of the jurisdiction should be in our view this: that wherever now a reference to the Master is of course, or almost as of course, the Master might with advantage have a primary jurisdiction; and the practical mode of regulating it would be to give it in all cases to the Master, subject to the right of either party to object to the Master's primary jurisdiction, and to demand a preliminary application to the Court, paying of course the costs of such application if the Court should think it a proper case to have gone primarily to the Master. We should suggest, also, that wherever the application is primarily to the Master, it should not prima facie require confirmation, but only if the Master thinks fit to direct that his report should be confirmed; but that in all cases the Master's decision should be open to appeal. Of course the creation of such a jurisdiction in the Master's office implies that it shall be a public Court. Without that there can be little doubt that nothing would be gained to the suitor by the change.

On the propositions with regard to the despatch of business in the offices, the mode of transacting official business, with regard to what the memorialists term the subordinate judicial department, and the banking department of the Court, we shall offer no observations.

These are mostly matters affecting almost exclusively the department of business transacted by the solicitors of the court, and of these matters the memorialists are much better judges than we can be.

But the sixth set of propositions relates to evidence, and contemplates extensive changes, omitting, however, the most important of all, viz. the introduction of viva voce examinations at the hearing of a cause.

The second of these propositions is, that rules shall be enacted to make the giving of evidence compulsory in bankruptcy, and other cases where proceedings are on petition, by allowing exhibition of interrogatories and viva voce examination.

So far as bankruptcy is concerned, the memorialists seem to have overlooked or forgotten that the giving of evidence is compulsory, in this sense at least, that when parties desire it, the Court directs as a matter of course that witnesses shall be examined viva voce. With regard to the general proposition of making the giving of evidence compulsory where the proceedings are on petition, this is to be observed, that there is no instance in the course of practice in English Courts of justice, of compelling witnesses to give evidence when the proceeding is by petition; and for this reason, that a proceeding by petition is not a claim of a right, but an appeal to the Court ad misericordiam. By an action, the plaintiff claims a right; so he does by a bill; and accordingly it is his right to have the testimony of all who may have the power of giving testimony. But a petition is the solicitation of a grace—a favour at the hands of the Court, and accordingly, unless the petitioner can establish the means of establishing a ground for the grant of the favour, the Court will not grant it; neither will the Court interfere to compel the Queen's subjects to come forward with testimony to support the application for the grace of the Court: and we conceive that this practice is sound in principle. No doubt it is fitting that attor should have the right of calling compulsorily on others to state in evidence matter essential to enable courts of justice to determine his claims to rights, either of person or of property. But when the question is, not strictly between me and others as to rights, but between me and the Court as to an indulgence, whether pending or after the decision of my strict rights, it is a strong thing to say that others should be rendered liable to compulsory attendance and the compulsory giving of testimony, in order to assist me in making out a case for favour. We, of course, apply this reasoning, not to the mere form of proceeding by petition; that is, we do not mean to say, that wherever a proceeding is by petition, there should be no compulsory evidence, but only that wherever the proceeding is, in substance, it is in most cases in Chancery, an application for an indulgence at the hands of the Court, and not for the decision of a claim of right, there is no ground for departing from the established practice of putting the petitioner to procure voluntary evidence, or to go without.

The next material suggestion is to allow affidavits to be used at the hearing of a cause, subject to the discretion of the judge.

Of this suggestion, we also entertain but very slight opinion in its present form. There are certain matters of evidence, in respect to which it is quite clear that it would be generally beneficial to allow the use of affidavits at the hearing. There are certain others, in respect to which it is equally clear that affidavits are a very objectionable kind of evidence. In the first class of cases it is quite needless to interpose the discretion of the judge; in the second it would be useless, because permission would never be granted.

Bankruptcy Reform: in a Series of Letters addressed to William Hawes, Esq., Chairman of the London Committee for promoting the Amendment of the Law of Bankruptcy and Insolvency. By C. FANE, Esq., one of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Court of Bankruptcy. Printed by Order of the Committee. Letters I., II., III., IV. 1848. Pp. 27.

A Letter to the Lord Chancellor, on the Amendment of the Law of Bankruptcy, with Comments on the existing Regulations and Suggestions for their Improvement. By WILLIAM SIDNEY GIBSON, Esq., Barrister at Law, Registrar of the Court of Bankruptcy for the Newcastle District. 1848. Pp. 32. [H. Butterworth.

No one has written so frequently or so pertinently on bankruptcy reform as Mr. Fane; and no one has published so many valuable suggestions in so few words. The secret of this is, that Mr. Fane never ventures to denounce an evil or propose a remedy until he has generalised his ideas on the subject-matter, and arrived at some guiding principle. The first of the letters before us is introductory, referring to the fluctuations of past legislation on the subject, and suggesting the establishment of permanent machinery for securing a regular and constant revision and reform of the law. Each of the subsequent letters is devoted to the exposition of some single but extensively important defect in the principles of the existing law of debt, and the indication of a comprehensive remedy.

The subject of the second letter is the want of a provision in our law for enabling an honest defendant at once to transfer the proceedings in an action of debt to a Court of Bankruptcy.

"Those courts have never permitted the debtor, when sued, to plead what in the vast majority of cases is his real defence, namely, that he is unable to meet his engagements. It is notorious, that in nineteen cases out of twenty, I might say forty-nine out of fifty, the defendant has no other defence to offer. There is nothing really in dispute. He knows that he owes the money, but he is insolvent, either in the sense of not being able to pay the debt at once, his means of payment being property which he cannot immediately turn into money, or in the sense of being unable to pay more than a certain number of shillings in the pound to all his creditors. In the one case his ground of resistance is, I cannot pay now; in the other, I cannot pay in full at any time. Now, that being the real truth in the vast majority of cases, one would have expected, that, if the common law really were, what some of its idolatrous worshippers would have us believe it to be, the perfection of common sense, it would enable such debtor to do what, as an honest man, he ought to do, state the truth. But no, the law does not permit him to do so, and never has permitted him in any period of its history. It compels him either to admit that he owes the money or to deny it. The defendant, if an honest man, feels that, if he admits that he owes the money, he will do an injustice to all his other creditors; for he will enable the creditor who has sued him to get 20s. in the pound upon his debt, and, in obtaining it, to make great havoc with his property, by selling it under a sheriff's seizure, notoriously the most wasteful mode of selling that can be adopted, and that, on the other hand, if he denies it, he puts a falsehood on the record.

"But perhaps it will be said, and what is the plaintiff to do? Is he to be baffled by such a statement, a statement which may be utterly false? Here again the answer is plain. The insolvent ought to support his plea, by saying that he had filed, or was preparing with all possible speed to file, on oath, in the proper 'Court of Bankruptcy a full and particular statement of his debts and assets. His plea ought also to be an act of bankruptcy, and should entitle the creditor, if not satisfied with the statement when filed, or if he did not choose to wait for the statement, to drop his proceedings at law and proceed in bankruptcy. The debtor's statement might show not insolvency, as it is generally understood, that is, inability to pay in full at any time, but grounds for postponing payment, or it might shew inability to pay at any time. Which ever was the case, the creditor would have a fair opportunity of forming a judgment, founded upon a document, on oath, recorded in a court of justice, what course he ought to pursue. If the debtor asked postponement, the creditor, having such ample means of satisfying himself that all was right, might be content to grant it. If the debtor offered a certain number of shillings in the pound, again the creditor might be willing to accept the offer. In either case the litigation would end. If the debtor were sued by another creditor, his course would be to repeat his plea, and refer to the statement already filed, and then that creditor would exercise his own discretion, as to what course he should pursue. If the second creditor was dissatisfied, or chose to have a regular investigation in the Court of Bankruptcy, he might proceed in that court.

"Of course, however, the debtor's statement, though on oath, might be wilfully false. The debtor might have inserted fictitious debts as due from him, or might have concealed some of the debts due to him, or some of his property. The check upon this offence, and the remedy for it when detected, would be to enact, that in such case any composition acceded to by the creditor under the supposition that the statement were true, should be taken only as a discharge pro tanto of his demand; that all the creditors acknowledged as such in the debtor's statement, should be deemed judgment creditors as against the debtor; and that each creditor should be at liberty to proceed against the debtor under the law of bankruptcy."

In the third letter is discussed the great and crying evil of the present system—the power which it gives to the dishonest debtor to withdraw his property from the reach of his creditors, with scarcely any fear of punishment.

"The next great error, to which I would call your attention, is also a common-law error, but is of an opposite character to the last. The last consisted in denying to the honest debtor the right of pleading the truth. This consists in encouraging, indeed, in tempting, the dishonest debtor to plead a falsehood. The last error discouraged honesty, this encourages knavery.

"This error arises from the combined action of two rules, recognised at law; the first, that an admission by a defendant against his interest, is evidence for the plaintiff; the second, that the creditor who first gets judgment and issues execution against a debtor's property, is entitled to priority of payment. The way in which these rules operate in practice to defeat justice, and give a triumph to knavery, is this: as soon as a bonâ fide creditor commences an action against a fraudulent debtor, the debtor looks out for a knave to help him. That he will soon find one, no one can doubt. 'Birds of a feather,' it is said, 'flock together;' and certainly there are few public-houses frequented by fraudulent traders in which, what political economists call, a 'skilled labourer' in the art of cheating creditors is not to be found. The 'skilled labourer' is desired to bring an action against the knavish debtor for such sum as will suffice to cover the value of the property it is wished to protect. To enable him to do so with plausibility, and to provide against accidents, an old stamp is procured, upon which a bill of exchange is written, and this bill is accepted by the supposed debtor, and handed to the supposed creditor. The action is then commenced. The defendant admits the demand. This admission, being presumably against interest, suffices to establish the plaintiff's case. Judgment is entered up. Execution issues. The sheriff seizes. The goods are valued by a sworn broker, and the sheriff passes them, by a bill of sale, to the supposed creditor. The business is concluded, and the debtor is now ready to receive his real antagonist. Meanwhile the proceedings of the bonâ fide creditor present a melancholy contrast to those of his competitor in the race for justice. Whilst the one has been speeding through the mazes of the law with the rapidity of a railway express, the other has moved, to use a phrase of Sir Walter Scott's, 'like a fly through a glue pot.' However, as there is no real defence, the bonâ fide creditor at last gets judgment, and he too, having called in the sheriff, proceeds to seize; and then, after having paid all the enormous expenses incident to the administration of justice, where justice is opposed, the fees of those who have the issue of writs, the fees of his own attorney, pleader, and counsel, of the officers of the court, of the jury, of the sheriff and his officers, he discovers that, after all this outgoing, there is no incoming, for there is nothing to seize. It is true that he may now commence a new proceeding to try the honesty of the previous seizure; but with what hope of success? In his former suit, he had to establish an affirmative, namely, that his debtor owed him so much, the evidence of which would naturally be within his own power, the question depending on his own contract; on the second occasion he would have to establish, not an affirmative, but a negative, namely, that his debtor did not owe a third person anything; and this he would have to do, without any evidence of his own, the question depending not on any contract of his, and with the evidence of the pretended debtor directly against him, and in the face of that rule of law which says, that the debtor's admission of a debt is evidence for the alleged creditor. Of course, even against such odds, he may succeed, but if he does it can only be because his new antagonist is a knave, and a man of straw; and of what value is success against such an antagonist? The judges may give judgment; but can the sheriff give the fruits of it?"

After some strictures on the rule of evidence glanced at in the above extract, Mr. Fane proceeds:—

"Then, with regard to the other rule of the common law, 'he, who first gets judgment, shall first receive payment.' Can any man be found, except perhaps some few, whom education and long familiarity with established error, have rendered incapable of taking an unprejudiced view of simple truths, who will justify it? Has not this system of priority of payment, as between creditors, been condemned everywhere but at common law? Chancery has always repudiated it in the administration of those assets which belong exclusively to Chancery jurisdiction, and which are, therefore, called equitable assets. The rule of the court is, 'equality is equity,' not 'inequality is equity.' And is not this the rule of justice and common sense? The Legislature too, in its bankruptcy and insolvency enactments, has long since repudiated the common-law rule. The very first bankrupt act, the 34 & 35 Hen. 8, c. 4, s. 1, passed three centuries ago, provided 'for true satisfaction and payment of the said creditors, that is to say, to every of the said creditors a portion, rate and rate-like, according to the quantity of their debts;' and such has been the bankruptcy rule ever since. It is only the common law, then, which still clings to old absurdities, still lags behind in the 'march of civilization. Surely the time is come when such inconsistencies should cease. Either equality or inequality is equity. If equality is equity, equal distribution should be the rule at law as well as in Chancery and bankruptcy. If inequality is equity, then the common-law rule should be established in Chancery and bankruptcy. It is impossible that both systems can be right.

"Then look at the practical effect of this rule of the common law. There are two great evils to guard against in the law of debtor and creditor, favouritism and downright robbery. Favouritism is, when the debtor, finding himself unable to pay all, determines to select one or more favourite creditors, and pay them in exclusion of, or to the prejudice of, the rest; robbery is, where he determines to transfer all to a sham creditor under the disguise of a legal seizure, with the view of himself enjoying all, except what it may be necessary for him to pay to the knave who assisted him. Now is it possible to conceive a system more admirably adapted to promote the success of favouritism, if that be the object, or robbery, if that be preferred, than the common-law system of preference or priority of payment? If the rule at common law were the same as the Chancery rule, or as that laid down by the Legislature for bankruptcy, the utmost that a favourite creditor would get would be his share, and to that, of course, he would be entitled; the utmost that the debtor and his co-conspirator could get, even if the conspiracy escaped detection, would be a dividend upon such sum as the co-conspirator could prove. Instead of getting the whole fund, as the conspirators do now, they would get between them part of a part, a dividend on one of many proofs. But we might justly hope, that, generally speaking, the knaves would get nothing; for a fraud must be indeed an ingenious one, which can stand the searching powers of inquiry, possessed by the Court of Bankruptcy, and the practised skill of an official assignee in hunting through books and papers and conducting such an investigation. Indeed, I cannot but think that such frauds would shortly die for want of sustenance.

"No doubt the evils incident to this unjust rule of the common law were felt in former times, but they were greatly repressed by the barbarous severity of the old law, under which the creditor, when thoroughly roused to indignation by the feeling that he had been wronged, had a sort of redress in his own hands, by throwing his debtor into prison, and, keeping him there, availing himself of the common-law maxim, 'he who cannot pay in purse, must pay in person.' And so long as the creditor had this means of resenting his wrongs, the debtor was afraid to practise a cheat, which, though not admitting of detection, exposure, and defeat by legal process, was obvious enough to the apprehension of common sense.

"Until lately, considerable difficulty was thrown in the way of these frauds in cases to which the law of bankruptcy applied, by the combined operation of two laws, one the law of arrest on mesne process, which enabled the hostile creditor easily and speedily to force his debtor to commit an act of bankruptcy, the other a law two or three centuries old, called the law of relations to the act of bankruptcy, which had a great effect in defeating fraudulent alienations or seizures of property in the eve of bankruptcy. Both those laws, however, have lately been superseded; the law of arrest in 1838, and the other in 1839; and now the bankrupt law affords no more protection to creditors against a fraudulent debtor, than the common law does.

"The remedy for this error is obvious enough, although it may appear somewhat startling to legal prejudices. It is to extend somewhat the Chancery and parliamentary rule, 'equality is equity,' and for this 'purpose to enact, that no creditor of a trader shall be allowed to take such trader's goods in execution at common law at all, but that he shall be confined to such remedies against property as the bankrupt laws may give him.

"The adoption of this remedy would at once put an end to favouritism and fraud in the great majority of cases, and would deprive the debtor of the plausible excuse for those offences which the law of seizure now furnishes. At present, if, when the debtor comes before the Court, it appears that the last remnant of his property was seized, just before his bankruptcy, and the commissioner complains, the debtor has a very plausible answer. He says, 'I was sued. I owed the money. I had no defence, and, therefore, made none. The plaintiff got judgment and seized my property. The law entitled him to do so. It was not my fault. How could I help it?' and thus he excuses the not producing even the wherewithal to pay for inquiry. The absence of assets deters creditors from accepting the office of assignee, and the debtor clears himself of all demands unopposed in two many cases, because no individual will pay the expense of opposition out of his own pocket. If, as proposed in my last letter, the right of pleading insolvency were conceded to the debtor, and, as now proposed, the power of private seizure were taken from the creditor, a debtor breaking with nothing would be without excuse. He could not account for the vanishing of the whole of his property, except by acknowledging that he had voluntarily transferred it, which would justly subject him to punishment."

The last letter is aimed at the abuses of the machinery, or rather at the machinery itself, by which the judgments of courts of law are put in force—the system of sheriffs and sheriffs' officers. We have only space for the suggestion of a remedy.

"We have traced the evil to its source. It is there the remedy should be applied. ABOLISH THE FEE SYSTEM. Abandon irregular remuneration as the stimulant to exertion, and rely on proper salaries, sense of duty, and hopes of promotion, as a sufficient substitute. Take a leaf out of the book of that enlightened statesman Sir Robert Peel; and as he substituted a paid and disciplined criminal police for the old parish watchman, the parish constable, and the police who hung about the police courts, so let us substitute a civil police, as regularly paid and disciplined, for sheriffs, under-sheriffs, bailiffs, and followers. One excellent result of such a measure would be, that the two bodies of police would mutually aid each other, and that good conduct in that body, in which the remuneration would of course be less, might be rewarded by promotion to the other. Another result might be, that we might cease to hear that an Englishman's house was his castle! against the officers of justice! for when the officers of justice were public servants regularly paid, clothed in uniform, and disciplined, surely no man would be allowed to shut his doors against them as if they were robbers. To the common objection, the expense, the obvious answer is, the present system is indirectly more expensive than any that could be substituted for it. But a better answer would be, industry is the real wealth of society; and, as the only way to encourage industry is to protect it, it follows that no expense can be too great which will effectually attain that end. The losses sustained by the industrious classes through bad debts have been estimated at twenty-five millions a year; and these losses may be justly attributed more to bad laws and bad execution of laws than to any other cause. The expense, however, might be amply provided for by a moderate per centage upon the proceeds of property sold."

Want of space compels us to notice Mr. Gibson's letter more briefly than it deserves. It contains many suggestions evidently resulting from considerable experience and reflection, and well deserving of attention. We are not, however, inclined to agree with Mr. Gibson in condemning the principle of private trusts for the benefit of creditors, though the present state of the law on the subject is far from satisfactory:—

"The disadvantages of these private arrangements are innumerable, to say nothing of the costly difficulty of procuring the consent of creditors to such a mode of composition. Sometimes it is discovered, after the waste of a considerable portion of the money which should go into the pockets of the creditors, that these difficulties are insuperable, and the attempted arrangement resolves itself into a bankruptcy. Under these trusts inquiries cannot be satisfactorily conducted, there are no powers to sift suspicious and fraudulent transactions, no speedy means of compelling third parties to account or surrender property. Favours and priorities, though unknown to the bankruptcy laws, are nevertheless given to induce particular creditors more obstinate or grasping, or justly indignant, than the rest, to come into the arrangement. There is not sufficient check upon the trustees, nor is there power to insure vigilant exertion, speedy division, or (without a suit in equity) any division at all. Trusts of magnitude, it is true, generally fall into the hands of a higher class of merchants and traders, who are incapable of improper conduct, but in perilous times even their own position is not in every case secure; while in the smaller class of cases, the trustee is generally a man of straw, or a creditor who, on becoming trustee, possesses himself of the property, and never thinks of dividing it, secure in the panoply of his own poverty from the costly shafts of the superior courts at Westminster. It is needless to cite instances in which, where a failing trader has chosen to constitute a trustee for the benefit (so called) of the creditors, and is himself shortly afterwards driven to seek protection under a stat, having, probably, nothing for his creditors but the book debts which the trustee was unable to collect, it is found that the respectable trustee has possessed himself of the tangible funds, while the assignees dare not bring, or have not the means to indemnify them for bringing, an action against him, and he, accordingly, remains in possession of the creditor's money, defying them, the Court of Bankruptcy, and the law."

Mr. Gibson urges, what the leading merchants of the city long ago recommended, the registration of all mortgages, assignments, bills of sale, charges, and other securities given by debtors, in order that creditors may have the means of ascertaining the true position of the man they are trusting.

WOODFALL'S PRACTICAL TREATISE on the LAW of LANDLORD and TENANT, with a full Collection of Precedents and Forms of Procedure, entirely remodelled and greatly enlarged. By S. B. HARRISON, Esq. The Fifth Edition, by F. L. WOLLASTON, Esq.

S. Sweet, Chancery-lane; A. Maxwell & Son, and V. and R. Stevens & G. S. Norton, Bell-yard, Lincoln's-inn.

Of whom may be had,

In Six very thick octavo Volumes, price 61. 10s. in strong cloth bds., BURN'S JUSTICE of the PEACE and PARISH OFFICER. The Twenty-ninth Edition, corrected and greatly enlarged, containing the Statutes and Cases to 7 & 8 Vict., inclusive, with a New Collection of Precedents. The Title "Poor" by Mr. Commissioner BERE, of the Exeter District Court of Bankruptcy; the rest of the Work by THOMAS CHITTY, Esq., of the Inner Temple.

On introducing a new and greatly improved edition of an old-established book, like "Burn's Justice," to the notice of the Members of the Magistracy and the Legal Profession, the Publishers need only point attention to the claims which it has upon two such large and influential bodies, to ensure a success similar to that which has attended all previous editions. Since the year 1837 (the date of the last edition) a considerable number of important Statutes have been passed; by several of those Statutes the executive power of the Magistrate has been somewhat restricted, and by others extended, while the whole duties of the office have undergone too many changes not to render a New Edition (embodying every Act and decision to the present time) a valuable and necessary addition to the Libraries of Gentlemen engaged in the Local Administration of Justice. The Six Volumes have received a thorough revision; the Forms have been re-modelled, and carefully adapted to the recent changes; several new Titles (created by modern enactments) have been introduced, and great exertions have been made to ensure a correct and full development of the Law as it now stands. The title "Poor," which occupies the whole of the Fourth Volume, has again been prepared by Mr. Commissioner BERE; and his object has been to furnish the cases at full length, being satisfied that no compendious abstract, however carefully made, would supply a satisfactory Manual for those who attend the Quarter Sessions. The Marginal Notes and the Index are, however, abridgments of the Cases, so that the general principles of the law may be ascertained without reading the fuller statement. The real utility of the Work as an authority, presenting the cases in detail, and superseding the Reports themselves, is thereby preserved, at the same time that the necessity of reading the whole is obviated by the fullness of the Marginal Notes.

By ANDREW BISSET, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister at Law.

"We should not have believed, had we not witnessed the success of the experiment, that the Law of Partnership could be thoroughly expounded within the compass of 176 pages, which is the extent of the first part of the work, devoted to the law of ordinary partnerships. . . . The style, to give it the highest praise that a text-writer can desire, reminds us of 'The Compendium of the Law of Real Property.'"—Jurist, No. 532.

EDITION:—

"The correction of the Work, in reference to the New Statutes and Cases, (which are brought down to May, 1848), and the revision of the Press in general, has been confided by the Author to his Son; his own retirement from professional practice, and the transfer of his attention to official duties, rendering him less competent than formerly to labours of that description. But the sheets have been invariably laid before him during the progress of the printing, and he feels himself able to vouch for their accuracy."

MEDICAL, LEGAL, and GENERAL MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 126, Strand, London.

CLERICAL, MEDICAL, and GENERAL LIFE AS- SURANCE SOCIETY.

In addition to the ordinary Assurance of Healthy Lives, this Society, early in the year 1834, originated the plan of granting Policies on the Lives of Persons more or less deviating from the standard of health.
Having issued one-fourth of the whole number of Policies on lives of that description, the Board have recently caused a careful investigation into this branch of the business to be made. The result of this investigation has proved highly satisfactory as to the past, and encouraging for the future. The data derived from long experience in this class of cases, and exclusively available by this Society, enable the Directors to issue with confidence their conviction that the system now adopted by them for assuring Invalid Lives is as safe and beneficial as that upon which the scale for Healthy Lives is constructed.

Every description of Assurance may be effected with this Society, and Policies are granted on the Lives of Persons in any Station, and of EVERY AGE.

BONUSES.

The two first Divisions averaged 221. per Cent. on the Premium paid.
The Third, 284. per Cent. The Fourth Bonus, declared January, 1847, averaged rather more than 361. per Cent.; and, from the large amount of Profit reserved for future appropriation, and other causes, the Bonuses hereafter are expected considerably to exceed that Amount.
The Society's Income, which is steadily INCREASING, is now upwards

SOLICITORS' and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 57, Chancery-lane, London.

This Society presents the following Advantages to the Assured:—

First.—The security of a large subscribed Capital.
Second.—Exemption of the Assured from all liability.
Third.—Tables of Premiums calculated on the true law of mortality, expressly for this Office, and affording particular advantages to young lives.

Fourth.—Participating and Non-participating Scales of Premiums.
In the former the Assured are entitled to EIGHTY PER CENT. or FOUR-FIFTHS of the profits divided amongst them periodically, either by way of addition to the sum assured, or in diminution of Premium, at the option of the Assured.

Fifth.—No deduction is made from the four-fifths of the profits belonging to the Assured for interest on Capital, or Guarantee Fund.

Sixth.—No Policy disputed, except in case of fraud.

Seventh.—This Society gives a much larger share of profits to the Assured, and at a lower rate of Premium than the great majority of other Life Offices.

Eighth.—Parties wishing to assure their lives without participating in the profits can do so on a lower scale of Premiums than that of a large

LONDON, JULY 15, 1848.

In our last Number we brought our consideration of the propositions of the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association, down to the question of taking evidence by affidavit at the hearing of a cause; and we submitted, that the proposal, if carried into effect at all, should be so, by permitting affidavits in some cases as a matter of course; and that, in all others, the practice should remain as it is. The principle of evidence by affidavit is, that a willing witness is brought to say just as much truth as it is convenient for the party calling him to extract; and as he cannot be cross-examined, so, if another willing witness on the opposite side cannot be found who can either directly disprove the fact alleged by the first, or neutralise his evidence by evidence inconsistent with it, there it must rest, and the Court must act on the uncontradicted evidence, although it may be but half the truth. This mode of taking evidence, if even more imperfect than it is, might answer the purpose of motions, and such interlocutory applications, where something must be done rapidly, if at all; and where, if wrong is done, it is at least not final. But, in truth, it is really adapted for the sort of case that is usually made on motion, where the evidence required consists more frequently of a variety of facts, and, perhaps, a variety of opinions as to fact, supporting some general allegations of title and of wrong done to it, than of specific evidence supporting specific allegations of right. For instance, on motions for injunctions in railway cases, or cases of infringement of patents, and copyright, and the like,—the question of title, and of wrong done to the title, depends usually on a multitude of facts and scientific opinions, which could scarcely be anticipated by any examination, and are, therefore, much more properly at first the subject of affidavits than of evidence taken upon interrogatories;

and the same may be said of many other cases of interlocutory applications. As, what the Court has to do on such applications, is not to decide a right, but to see what shall be done pending the ultimate decision of a right, so, what it wants to gain is rather a general view of the whole prima facie case, than a minutely exact view of the particular parts to which the case, after all its dross has been eliminated, will ultimately be reduced. Affidavits which are in their nature wide, but somewhat loose, evidence, answer this purpose very well: probably better than any other. But for that strict inquiry which is requisite at the hearing of a cause, when the evidence must often be extracted from hostile witnesses, who must be pinned down to particulars, and where no evidence could be safely relied upon in respect of which there was not, at least, the power of cross-examination, affidavits are, from their very nature, wholly insufficient and unfit. We have no hesitation, therefore, in saying, that we condemn wholly the notion of using affidavits at the hearing in proof of facts generally. There is, however, a class of facts, namely, the execution and identification, and, perhaps, the collateral facts relating to the transmission and custody of documentary evidence, to which, evidence by affidavit might, with advantage, be applied at the hearing. Not that, in strict reasoning, these facts differ from any other facts, but that practically, as it is well known, they do so differ. Thus, affidavits which are already admissible to prove the execution of deeds, and the mere handwriting of letters, such matters, in fact, as admit not of cross-examination, might, we think, be very advantageously extended to proof of the custody of such documents; the securing or reception thereof; and the connexion thereof with particular transactions. But for examination into the acts of individuals more or less complicated, not being the mere collateral acts connected with the proof of documents, and connecting them with the transactions in the suit, we submit that affidavits should continue to be a tabooed species of evidence.

We have now dealt with the virtues and the sins of commission of the proponents; and we have next to deal with their sins of omission. And we must ask here how it is that, spreading their attention over some principles and a multitude of details; abolishing in perspective bills and answers, and motions, and petitions, without end; transferring the Bank of England to Chancery Lane; throwing half a dozen offices into one; planning gigantic chronological indexes; and recommending other revolutionary measures—how is it, we say, that they have shrunk from touching the master evil of all in Chancery proceedings,—the exclusion of vivâ voce testimony at the hearing?

We have never been able to understand,—we are yet unable to understand,—and that, after giving the subject much consideration, why equity should reject the aid of vivâ voce evidence. There is a good reason why it should continue to examine a defendant's conscience only in writing. That reason is, that the tyranny of vivâ voce examination of the defendant himself would be intolerable. But that reason does not, nor does any other that we are aware of, apply to the examination of an indifferent witness. A witness in Chancery stands in no different position from that of a witness at common law: he comes to prove facts within his knowledge, not affecting himself or his own interests more than at law. There is no general reason why he should not be examined and cross-examined, with all the same advantages to the examiners, that they derive at law from seeing the witness's bearing, and following up answers by questions suggested by those answers. But then, it is said, that much additional time would be taken up, and that there is a great difference between a Chancery suit which embraces all the points in an entire litigation, and an action which is only about one or two specific litigated points. The answer is, firstly, if more time were to be taken up, that is a reason for not taking the best means to attain justice. What are Courts of Equity for but to do equity? The question of a little more or a little less time is quite trivial in comparison with the question, equity or no equity. Besides, it is a mere assumption to say, that more time will be consumed if vivâ voce evidence be used at the hearing. Sometimes, no doubt, more time would be consumed at the actual hearing of a cause. But, then, infinitely less would be consumed in the preparation of evidence; and the question again for the suitors and for the country is, not whether time is consumed, but whether such as is consumed, is consumed with the greatest effect. Admit that the effect of vivâ voce evidence would be to increase the labour of the judges,—admitting at the same time, as must be admitted, that much would be saved in the preparation of evidence,—the result would be simply that more judges would be required, and fewer pleaders and solicitors, and solicitors' clerks and examiners, and commissioners' and examiners' officers. And suppose that were so: on the whole, judges are probably not more expensive to the country than pleaders and solicitors and subordinate Chancery officers. But if they were, still the question comes back to the old point: whether what the country looks for is not the actual obtaining of justice? whether, even if it could be shewn that such justice would cost a little more, still the country would not desire to have it—a fortiori, whether it does not desire at least, that the experiment should be made, whether justice cannot be obtained more completely without more expense.

We have assumed throughout, that written evidence taken upon written interrogatories, after the fashion of Chancery, does not elicit the facts as well in all cases as vivâ voce evidence; and we conceive, that proposition is too clear and too fully admitted to require argument. We do not suggest that it should be compulsory on parties to examine all their witnesses vivâ voce. That might be left to their discretion; as there are proceedings in Chancery wherein the preservation of the evidence deliberately recorded, may be more important than the advantage of oral testimony. All that we contend for is, that the parties should be at liberty to examine at their discretion all, or such of their witnesses as they think fit, vivâ voce, and that the judge should be empowered to require vivâ voce examination of any witnesses examined in the cause, if he desires it. If this were the practice, a great amount of Chancery business which is now sent to law would be concluded where it began, in Chancery—we believe, with less expense to the parties in most cases. Time only can shew whether the country would save or lose in point of money; but we have not a doubt that it would gain in the administration of justice.

CLERICAL, MEDICAL, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.

In addition to the ordinary Assurance of Healthy Lives, this Society, early in the year 1834, originated the plan of granting Policies on the Lives of Persons more or less deviating from the standard of health. Having issued one-fourth of the whole number of Policies on Lives of that description, the Board have recently caused a careful investigation into this branch of the business to be made. The result of this investigation has proved highly satisfactory as to the past, and encouraging for the future. The data derived from long experience in this class of cases, and exclusively available by this Society, enable the Directors to state with confidence their conviction that the system now adopted by them for assuring Invalid Lives is as safe and beneficial as that upon which the scale for Healthy Lives is constructed.

BONUSES.

The two first Divisions averaged 22½ per Cent. on the Premiums paid. The Third, 28½ per Cent. The Fourth Bonus, declared January, 1847, averaged rather more than 36½ per Cent.; and, from the large amount of Profit reserved for future appropriation, and other causes, the Bonuses hereafter are expected considerably to EXCEED that Amount.

The Society's Income, which is steadily INCREASING, is now upwards of 132,000l. per annum.

LONDON, JULY 22, 1848.

SOME difficulty has arisen in determining the exact character of a joint-stock company, completely registered under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110. One of the objects of that act, as therein stated, was to invest "such companies with the qualities and incidents of corporations, with some modifications, and subject to certain conditions and regulations;" and it is enacted, that, "on the complete registration of any company being certified by the registrar of joint-stock companies, such company and the then shareholders therein, &c. shall be and are hereby incorporated by the name of the company as set forth in the deed of settlement, and for the purpose of carrying on the trade or business for which the company was formed, but only according to the provisions of this act, and of such deed as aforesaid, and for the purpose of suing and being sued, and of taking and enjoying the property and effects of the said company." (Ss. 1, 25).

In the text books on the subject, such company, completely registered, is called a "limited corporation," or a "quasi corporation;" and the question has been as to the corporate limits of the company, and in what respect it might still be regarded as if it were incorporated.

This question appears to have been satisfactorily answered, to some extent, by the recent cases of Ridley v. The Plymouth Grinding Company and The Kingsbridge Flour Mill Company v. The same, in the Exchequer, 12 Jur. 542), which have decided, that such company, being a corporation only for some purposes, may, in certain cases, be bound by contracts not under seal; and also, that a contract entered into by such company without the formalities required by the 41th section of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, may be enforced against the company, although not by them. By that section, every contract of such company shall be in writing, and signed by two at least of the directors of the company, and shall be sealed with the common seal thereof, or signed by some officer of the company on its behalf, &c.; "and in the absence of such requisites, or any of them, any such contract shall be void and ineffectual, except as against the company on whose behalf the same shall have been made."

In the former of the above-cited cases the contract was a written demise not under seal, and with reference to this branch of the subject, Parke, B., said, "As to the objection that this instrument ought to have been under seal in order to bind this company, I am satisfied, that, under this statute, although it is rather curiously worded, these quasi corporations are bound by contracts, although not under seal, and not having the requisites prescribed in the 44th section of the statute; for it contains a clause, that contracts not having those requisites shall not be effectual, except as against the company on whose behalf they have been made. If, therefore, this contract has been made by this company, it is no objection in their mouth, that it was not made under seal, although it is of course competent to them to say, that it was not made by an agent having authority to bind them."

Therefore, a joint-stock company, completely registered, is a corporation only for some purposes, and even as to those purposes it will be bound by a contract not under their common seal, or not attended in other respects by the formalities required by the statute.

Several other points of importance were also decided in the above cases, namely, that in an action against such a company on a contract made in their name, the deed constituting the company; a copy of which has been delivered to the registrar on complete registration, is receivable in evidence to shew what persons have power to act for the company, that a ratification by those persons of a contract made in the name of the company will bind the company, as also will admissions made by those persons; and that where by the terms of such deed the management of the company is committed to a board of eleven directors, five of whom are to be a quorum, for the dispatch of business, the acts of the board are not evidence to bind the company, unless it be shewn that at least five directors were present.

THE EXTENT OF THE PRIVILEGE OF A PARTY TO A SUIT FROM ARREST.

In a case very recently before the Vice-Chancellor Wigram, the question was, whether the privilege from arrest of a party attending a cause extends to his attendance on the Registrar for the purpose of drawing up the minutes of a decree. It was admitted by those who opposed the claim of privilege, that a party to a suit is privileged while attending undo, revertendo, et morando, on a judicial proceeding, as at the hearing of the cause, or in attendance in the Master's office, (to which might have been added attending an arbitrator under an order of the Court). (Moore v. Booth, 3 Ves. 350). But it was contended, that there was a distinction between attendance on a judicial proceeding and attendance on a merely ministerial proceeding; that to the latter case the privilege does not extend,—at any rate, that it does not extend to it as of course; and that a special necessity for the attendance of the party must be shewn; that where, as in the case before the Court, the Registrar was attended by the solicitor of the party, the attendance of the party himself was unnecessary. That the office of the Registrar is purely ministerial; that he cannot in the smallest degree alter the decree of the Court; that the decree is finally made when it is pronounced in court; and hence, that attending the Registrar to draw up the decree is not in any sense an attendance at the hearing, or having reference to the hearing of the cause. The Vice-Chancellor thought the privilege did extend to the attendance of the party before the Registrar, although his solicitor attended with him. His Honor's judgment proceeded principally on the ground, that the practice of the Court is to give the parties to a suit the opportunity of watching the drawing up of a decree. That a party shewn to have an interest under a decree has the right to take care in some form that it shall be correctly drawn up; and that if, as was admitted, the presence of the counsel and solicitors of a party at the hearing does not deprive him of his right of personally attending, and being protected on such attendance, there was no reason why, in seeing that the decree is properly drawn up, he should be deprived, by the attendance of his solicitor, of his right of personal attendance.

The cases in which the question of privilege has been raised with reference to proceedings not clearly judicial are somewhat conflicting. In an old case (Alisbury v. Troughton, 1 Rep. Ch. 92) it was held, that a defendant to a suit coming to put in his answer was privileged. In a more modern case (Crone v. Odell, 2 Moll. 525) it was held, that a party coming to town to file a bill of review or put in an answer is not privileged.

Whether, therefore, a party going to put in his answer is privileged is unsettled; but that he is not so on going to file his bill seems clear. There is, however, a case, which, we believe, was not cited to the Vice-Chancellor Wigram, which strongly supports the decision of his Honor. The case we refer to is Ex parte Burrows, (8 Ves. 535), in which it was held, that the clerk of a solicitor would be committed for contempt for attempting to break open the desk of a clerk in the Registrar's office. The decision being on the express ground that the Registrar's office was a part of the court itself, the question of jurisdiction was distinctly raised by counsel, and the defence upon merits was, that the order was improperly delayed. The result of this case is to put the Registrar's office, so far as the privilege is the privilege of the Court, on the same footing as the Master's office, or the Court itself. Now, there seems considerable ground for contending, that the principle of the privilege from arrest in attending courts of justice, is not so much the privilege of the party in regard to his convenience, as of the Court in regard to the respect due to it. If the convenience of the party were the ground of the privilege, it would be immaterial to what Court the application for discharge from arrest is made. A Court of Common Law could as well take notice of an arrest inconsistent with the right of a party conveniently to prosecute his suit in Chancery, as the Court of Chancery. But the authorities shew that the application for discharge must be made to the Court of which the arrest was a contempt. (Serl's case, 2 Ves. & B. 374, and Plomer v. M'Donough, 1 D. & S. 232). And the case of Baker v. Williams (4 T. R. 377) shews still more strongly that the Court, in protecting the party, proceeds on the principle, that the arrest is a contempt of the Court, not on the principle of convenience to the party. In that case the Court of Queen's Bench refused to interfere to protect the privilege of a party attending the Commissioners in Bankruptcy, on this ground, that the application was not made in the right place; the treating the Commissioners in Bankruptcy as strangers to it, and saying that the Court to which the application was made was not a Court of which any contempt was committed.

If this be so, it would be inconsistent with Ex parte Burrows not to treat an arrest while attending the Registrar's office to draw up the minutes of a decree as improper, on the ground of its being a contempt of the Court, without going into the question of its being improper, on the ground of the right of the party to see his decree drawn up.

PRACTICAL EFFECTS OF SEVERAL COUNTS AND PLEAS.

3. As regards staying Proceedings.

Where there are two or more counts in a declaration, and any one of them is for a demand of a sum certain, the defendant may obtain a stay of proceedings as to that count upon payment of the sum of money therein demanded, and costs relating to that count; and the plaintiff may proceed on the other counts if he please. If he does not proceed on them, the defendant is bound to pay him the costs of such other counts. (Archb. Prac., p. 1198, 8th edit.)

4. As regards Rule to compute.

The presence of a count for a cause of action which cannot be referred to the Master, will prevent plaintiff from having a rule to compute on judgment being entered by default; and he must either resort to a writ of inquiry, or enter a nolle prosequi, or a remittitur damns, as to the counts which may not be referred to the Master, or apply to strike them out. Where a declaration contained counts on a promissory note and for goods sold, and defendant after delivery of such declaration paid the plaintiff 150%. "on account of the cause," leaving a balance due less than the amount of the note. It was held that the plaintiff could not have a rule to compute without having the count for goods sold struck out of the declaration, or unless the defendant would consent to the entry of a nolle prosequi as to that count; nor could the plaintiff enter a remittitur damna as to the damages on that count, because he had received them. (Jones v. Shiel, 3 Mee. & W. 433; S. C., 6 Dowl. 597).

II. The Effect before or without Trial of using several Pleas.

Set-off.—Several pleas of set-off may, it seems, be pleaded to different parts of an action. (Gibson v. Bell, 1 B. & C. 748).

On Demurrer.—Defendants pleaded payment into court, and, among other pleas, a special plea of lien. The plaintiff took the money out of court, and demurred to the special plea, which demurrer was decided in his favour. He then entered a nolle prosequi to the residue of the action, except the costs of the demurrer; on objection, that the nolle prosequi was tantamount to an admission that the plaintiff had no cause of action beyond the sum paid into court, it was held, that he was entitled to the costs of the demurrer. And per Wightman, J.—“If a defendant spreads out a number of bad pleas on the record, to which a plaintiff is advised to demur, why should he not have his costs if he succeeds on his demurrer?” (Williams v. Vines, 9 Jur. 809). See, as to writ of inquiry in such case, Lush. Prac. 706; and see, where the plaintiff discontinued as to some issues after judgment on demurrer as to others, The Mayor of Macclesfield v. Gee, (8 Jur. 1053). Where there are two pleas, each going to the whole of the action, upon one of which issue is joined, and upon the other judgment is given for the defendant upon demurrer, the Court will allow the defendant to strike out the plea on which issue was joined on payment of the costs of that issue. (Young v. Beck, 3 Dowl. 804). A plaintiff is entitled to the costs of a judgment upon demurrer in an action of trespass, although issues in the same cause have been tried, and less than 40s. damages obtained, and the judge has refused to certify; but he is not entitled to the costs of the issues in fact. (Poole v. Grantham, 14 Law Journ., N. S., C. P., 24).

As to the priority of decision, where there are issues in law and issues in fact, see 2 Arch. Prac. 830).

Where several defendants, whose interest is identical, plead separately similar pleas, which are demurred to, one counsel only is entitled to be heard on the argument. (Wilson v. Carey, 2 Dowl., N. S., 530).

III. Effect at the Trial of using several Counts and Pleas.

Right to begin.—The number of pleas used exercises an important influence on the right to begin and to reply. By the defendant's adding the general issue to an affirmative plea, the plaintiff often obtains this right.

It may be laid down as a rule, that, wherever the plaintiff's prima facie case is easily capable of proof, and the defence rests not on a denial of such case, but on a justification or other affirmative matter, it is better to omit pleas in denial.

In cases, however, of slander, libel, and other actions or personal injuries, where the plaintiff seeks to recover actual damages of an unascertained amount, he is entitled to begin, although the affirmative of the issue may, in point of form, be with the defendant. And wherever there is anything—e. g. merely the amount of damages—to be proved by the plaintiff, he is entitled to begin. (Mercer v. Whall, 5 Q. B. Rep. 447), unless, indeed, the damages be merely nominal. (Chapman v. Rawson, 10 Jur. 287—See remarks upon, in 9 Jur. 381).

Evidence.—In an action for an assault, if the declaration contain only one count, the plaintiff, after proving one assault, cannot waive that, and proceed to give evidence of another. (Stante v. Prickett, 1 Camp. 473).

Where several pleas are on the record, each plea must be considered as if it stood alone, and cannot be used as an admission of another. Therefore, where, in an action by indorsee against maker of a promissory note, the defendant pleaded, first, that he did not make the note; and, secondly, that he made it for the accommodation of the plaintiff, it was decided, that the second plea could not be called in aid of proof of the identity of the defendant with the maker on the first issue. (Jones v. Jones, 9 Mee. & W. 75; and see Reg. v. Smith, 8 Jur. 599; Twemlow v. Askey, 6 Dowl. 597; Fischer v. Auld, Id. 594). And if a declaration contain two inconsistent counts, and defendant pays money into court on one count, which plaintiff accepts, the defendant cannot read the other count as any evidence to the jury, for the purpose of negating allegations in the count on which money was paid in. (Gould v. Oliver, 2 Man. & G. 233).

Verdict.—If there are several counts and plaintiff prove but one cause of action, he is entitled to a verdict on one count only; and if the judge direct a verdict on more than one, a bill of exceptions, it seems, may be tendered. (Ward v. Bell, 1 C. & M. 848). And a new trial was granted, where a verdict had passed generally for plaintiff on two counts, the one for breach of a warranty of soundness of a horse, the other for breach of warranty that a certain other horse was free from vice, and at the trial the plaintiff had proved only one contract for the purchase of a horse, and that it was unsound. (Deere v. Ivey, 4 Q. B. Rep. 379; and see Holford v. Dunnett, 7 Mee. & W. 348; Shires v. Burrow, 2 M. & Rob. 405). In such a case there should be one count with two breaches. But if the consideration of a bill of exchange be stated in the particulars of demand, the plaintiff may prove it, to avoid a verdict being entered against him on the common counts. (Ryder v. Ellis, 8 C. & P. 357).

In an action for diverting a water-course, the defendant in one plea claimed to have water flow from a mill-stream to a ditch “at all times,” and in another plea claimed it only “at the time of flashes,” and the jury having found the right in his favour, “at all times,” the judge discharged the jury as to the claim “at the time of the flashes.” (Drewett v. Shear, 7 C. & P. 485).

Taking Verdict upon Issues separately.—In a case where issue was joined on three pleas, the judge summed up and directed the jury to find their verdict upon each plea separately. He then, with the consent of the parties, left the Court, but desired the associate to take the verdict upon each of the pleas, delivering to him the abstract. The jury having agreed, the associate asked them whether they found a verdict for the plaintiff or the defendant, and the foreman answered “for the plaintiff.” The counsel for the defendant then requested the associate to put the questions to them, which was opposed by the plaintiff's counsel, and thereupon the associate refused to put any further questions. One of the jury then said, “We find unconditionally for the plaintiff;” but another of them observed, “I think there were three questions left for our consideration by the judge.” It was held, that the omission to take the verdict upon the issues separately, was a miscarriage on the part of the officer; in effect, a miscarriage of the Court itself, and a new trial was granted without costs on either side. (Bentley v. Fleming, 1 C. B. 479; 9 Jur. 402).

Damages.—The pleader should not indulge in justifications which cannot be supported by evidence; for where, in an action for false imprisonment, the defendant pleaded not guilty, and also a justification on the ground that the plaintiff had committed a felony, it was decided that the putting the second plea on the record was a persisting in the charge, and was to be taken into account by the jury in estimating the damages, and this, although at the close of the plaintiff's case, the defendant's counsel abandoned such plea, and exonerated the plaintiff from the charge. (Warwick v. Foulkes, 12 Mee. & W. 507). But it is no evidence of malice, so as to prevent the defence in an action of libel that a communication was privileged. (Wilson v. Robinson, 7 Q. B. Rep. 68; 9 Jur. 726).

IV. The Effect after Trial of using several Counts and Pleas.

Judgment.—If some of the counts in the declaration be bad, and no evidence be offered applicable to those counts, but a general verdict given, the postea may be amended by confining the verdict to the good counts. This has been done after error brought and errors assigned. (Lush, Prac., p. 495).

In Jackson v. Galloway, (1 C. B. 280), the plaintiff two years after reversal of judgment on one count, (on which he had elected to enter up the verdict), applied for leave to amend by entering the verdict on another count, but the Court held the application to be too late; and also doubted whether they had power to make such amendment after judgment in the court of error.

Venire de Novo and Arrest of Judgment.—Where there is a bad and a good count and a general assessment of damages, the Court will not arrest the judgment, but will award a venire de novo that the jury may assess the damages separately. (Emblin v. Dartnell, 1 Dowl. & L. 1010; Airy v. Fearnside, 6 Dowl. 654; Empson v. Griffin, 11 Adol. & Ell. 186; Leach v. Thomas, 2 Mee. & W. 427; Gould v. Oliver, 2 Man. & G. 231). But where there is a misjoinder of counts and a general verdict for the plaintiff, the Court will arrest the judgment, and will not award a venire de novo. (Corner v. Shew, 1 Horn & Hurl. 215; 4 Mee. & W. 163).

Where separate damages are assessed on each count of a declaration, and one count is bad, the judgment will be arrested on that count only. (Hayter v. Moat, 2 Mee. & W. 56).

The omission of the judge to direct a jury specifically as to one of the issues, which is an immaterial one, is no ground for a new trial. (Watson v. Whitmore, 8 Jur. 964).

Non obstante Verdicto and Repleader.—In an action of debt, the defendant pleaded five pleas. Upon demurrer to the fourth plea, (pleaded to the whole declaration), the Court gave judgment for the defendant, and expressed their opinion, that the declaration disclosed no cause of action. The plaintiff, at the trials of the issues, in fact, had a verdict on the first, second, and third issues; and the defendant on the fifth, which raised an immaterial issue. It was held, that the plaintiff could not have judgment non obstante verdicto on the fifth issue; neither was he entitled to a repleader. (Willoughby v. Willoughby, 11 Jur. 902).

ON THE ART OF TAKING EVIDENCE BY COMMISSIONERS.

1. A Letter to the Metropolitan Sanitary Commissioners. By J. TOULMIN SMITH, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn. [S. Sweet, Chancery-lane.]
2. A few Words on the New Commission of Sewers; with Comments on the Reports and Evidence of the Sanitary Commission. By A FARMER, A LAWYER, and AN EX-COMMISSIONER. [T. & W. Boone, Bond-street.]

Sufficient materials probably now exist for a work on the "art of taking evidence by commissioners," upon a similar plan to Mr. William Gerard Hamilton's "Parliamentary Logick," or the Novum Organon. As the art of Induction began to be practised in the time of Elizabeth, and was reduced to system by Lord Bacon in that of her successor, so the art of Suction by Commission * (of which the process of taking evidence is the principal part), having been introduced in the reign of William IV., will probably be digested in that of Victoria. Need we say that we look to Lord Brougham for the "Novissimum Organon Fallaciarum?" In the meantime we will give a few hints to amateurs, with illustrations. By judiciously selecting your witnesses, and skilfully managing their examinations, you may establish any conclusion upon a basis of either a square or a cubic foot of printed evidence. When you are dealing with a witness of the right sort, you have only (and this requires little skill) to put your views with suitable arguments into his mouth, his replies being to your queries as twaddle-dum to twaddle-dee; and having accumulated a respectable number of such witnesses, you have then to settle your report, and state your or your master's views as "the result of the extensive inquiries made under this commission." When you meet with a hostile witness you must confound him, which is done by making your questions very long, complicated, and confused. In this case you must so word your question that the opinion propounded in it may have the appearance of being the opinion of the witness you are interrogating; or, if that cannot be done, you must so frame your examination as to extract, or appear to extract, from the refractory witness an admission of something which you have elsewhere represented to be favourable to the desired conclusion. The easiest way of doing this is, first to propound your propositions as unquestionable, and then, without giving your witness time to interrupt you, ask him some immaterial question to which he must give an affirmative answer, that answer appearing in print as an assent to the whole of your harangue. This, though an old trick, is still in great favour. If your witness remonstrates, have at him with a second harangue, which may be composed of either unintelligible or identical propositions. You will get some valuable hints for emergencies by attending Mr. Spencer Hall's lectures on mesmerism. But there is no occasion to have any hostile witnesses. Those of the right sort may be procured in abundance by the judicious use of ground-bait, i.e. by circulating among the appropriate professions or trades circular letters of inquiry, containing decent but plain hints of the necessity of certain evidence to the establishment of certain jobs. Where (as from your respect or inability to smother an honest colleague who sometimes happen) a mass of bona fide evidence has been collected which goes against your views, you must boldly refer to its value and bulk, and, trusting to the latter quality to save you harmless, pronounce peremptorily that it makes right for, instead of against, you. We shall now endeavour to illustrate these rules by a few pertinent examples, beginning with the last-mentioned.

Under the Poor-Law Commission of Inquiry, appointed in 1832, a vast body of valuable information was collected respecting the condition of the labouring population, particularly the agricultural labourers. That which the Commissioners themselves in their Report (p. 2, 8vo. ed.) describe as "the most valuable part of their evidence," was a Digest of the Answers to Queries circulated by the Commissioners through all the Parishes in England and Wales, forming the Appendix (B.) to the Report, and containing about five thousand folio pages. Now, in the most important part of their Report, (that on Remedial Measures), the Commissioners make certain assertions respecting the condition of the agricultural labourers, which are directly in the teeth of this evidence.

* It has long been known, that bees, by the use of a peculiar food, can change a neuter into a queen; but our modern commissioners have brought to perfection a stranger art,—the preparation of a pabulum by which John Bull is turned into a milk cow.

"We can state," they say, (Report of 1834, p. 228, 8vo. ed.), "as the result of the extensive inquiries made under this Commission into the circumstances of the labouring classes, that the agricultural labourers when in employment have greatly advanced in condition; that their wages will now produce to them more of the necessities and comforts of life than at any former period." Now, instead of this being true, it is proved by the most unexceptional evidence, and recognised by many writers of authority, (among others, by Mr. Senior, in his Lectures on Wages, delivered before the University of Oxford in 1830), that "the labourers in the reign of Henry VII. earned two pecks of wheat a day, and now (1830) earn only one." (Lecture I., p. 2). But we once had occasion to make a most minute investigation of the evidence, particularly the very voluminous Appendix (B.) above mentioned, upon which the Report professes to be founded; and the result is, that, though undoubtedly there are some witnesses who state that the labourers "are better off now than formerly," the proportion of these to the witnesses who state the contrary is less than one to ten. We do not discuss the precise value of this evidence; the present question being, whether the evidence, such as it is, has been honestly dealt with. The parties who wrote the above-cited passage either knew the evidence collected under the Commission, or they did not. It is needless to characterise the horns of this dilemma, upon one of the horns of which they have taken up a settlement. But they manage to interpose a cushion, in this way: if you complain that they have disregarded the evidence, they ask, "What evidence?" And then if you name that in Appendix (B.), they triumphantly refer to the passage in which it is characterised as the most valuable part of their evidence; after which you must be, to nine-tenths of the easy public, a dog with an ill name.

Taking up another of those documents which profess to deal with evidence "by authority," the "General Report from the Poor-Law Commissioners in 1842 on the Sanitary Condition of the Labouring Population of Great Britain," we read, at p. 188, "An eminent manufacturer (quære, of evidence?) in Lancashire stated to me in November ultimo*, 'That the same yarn which cost my father 12d. per lb. to make in 1792, all by machinery, now costs only 2d. per lb.; paying then only 4s. 4d. per hand wages weekly, now 8s. 8d., or more.' The prices of provisions," adds the reporter, "were, during the first period, as high as now, and the cost of clothing thirty or forty per cent. higher." In 1792, the price of wheat (Winchester quarter) was 2s. 11d. In 1842, (the now the reporter speaks of),

* There is a peculiar phraseology observable in some of these Reports—a preference of long words for short ones, as ere, of "ultimo" for "last;" of long, elaborate, and imposing phrases for shorter and more simple ones, as where an ordinary person would say "in some cases," this authoritative penman says, "in a large proportion of cases;" so he tells of the "annoyance occasioned by a nuisance;" and sometimes the reporter indulges in the elaboration of sentences, some of which (we speak it with reverence, as Lord Cardwike, in his judgment in Garrick v. Cotton, said of the refined and speculative reasonings of the judges about the cintilla juris) are not very easy to comprehend; as where, in the Constabulary Force Report, he talks of "persons residing in their respective neighbourhoods." An interesting paper might be written on this reporter's flowers of rhetoric, which have reminded us occasionally of the sesquipedalian feats of the ingenious gentlemen sometimes irreverently by the profane styled "penny-a-line-men." Having mentioned the Constabulary Force Commissioners' Report, we may add, that it abounds with statements of a most startling description; and we once heard an individual, who had had the best opportunities of knowing all the mysteries attending the getting up of such Reports, exclaim, as he turned over some of its pages, "Lord bless me, what a lie this is!"

the average price (for the quarter ended Lady-day, 1842) was 60s. 7½d. The price of other provisions was also higher, and of every thing but cotton goods.

It appears, from the pamphlet named at the head of this article, that Mr. Toulmin Smith, having been examined by the Metropolitan Sanitary Commissioners on the 28th April last, found it necessary, in consequence of the mode in which his examination was conducted, to send in on the following morning a formal and emphatic protest against it, "as at variance with the spirit of impartial inquiry, and calculated to present an erroneous view of his statements and conclusions." More than two months having elapsed without any opportunity having been afforded him for the necessary explanations, Mr. Smith has addressed a letter to the Commissioners, pointing out, by a few examples, the real character of the allegations and assumptions of which the greater part of the questions consisted; and admissions as to which, or conclusions from which, as admitted premises, it appeared to be the principal object of the examination to extract from him. We have only room for two extracts.

"The following is among the questions put to me, (p. 25): 'This question was put to the Chairman of the City of London Commission of Sewers: "as the present constitution of your body is of retail dealers, the retail dealers being the minority of the city, may they not be said to have for their own purposes, viz. for the purposes of increasing their retail custom, a power of bringing cattle into the city, and annoying the rest of the metropolis by the quantity of them so brought, and not only of annoying the rest of the metropolis, but may they not bring many thousand head of cattle into the city, to the annoyance of wholesale traders and other people within the city who are non-free-men?" That is an admitted fact, that that is the ground of the opposition.' I have been most positively assured that no such question was asked of the Chairman of the City of London Commission of Sewers. It will be observed, that no answer is stated as having been given. It is, instead, asserted, that something or other—it does not at all appear what—is 'an admitted fact,' that that is the ground of the opposition.' It is almost needless to say, that the 'admitted fact' has never been 'admitted' by any one." [p. 10, n.]

"Question, page 32.—'Have you seen the Registrar-General's Report, in which he states that within seven years the excess of infantile deaths within the limits of the corporation of the city of London has been 58,000 above what it would have been according to the rate of mortality in another district?'

"The place of any such statement was not shewn to me at the time, and I expressed some doubts as to its accuracy, if it had been made; which doubts were met with strongly expressed surprise and indignation. I have since ascertained, as a matter of positive fact, that the Registrar-General has never made any such statement whatever. Not only is no such statement to be found in his returns, but he has expressly disclaimed, in writing, the statement thus laid upon him. This point has been so often and prominently urged and reiterated, that it will be well to set it entirely at rest by citing, at length, his own disclaimer. The following is a copy of a correspondence which has passed upon this subject, the original of the Registrar's part in which I have myself seen:—

"Remembrancer's Office, Guildhall,
"23rd June, 1848.

"Sir,—The Commissioners of Sewers of the city of London have received, by the medium of Lord Ashley, a communication which contains the following extract:—

"Yet the Registrar-General proclaims that nearly six thousand children are annually destroyed in the city

'over and above the number that die in a neighbouring district, and by no means a healthy one as compared with many rural districts. 'If we take children under five years of age,' says the Registrar-General, 'where neither disturbing causes nor occupations interfere, the deleterious influence of London in its present state will appear undisguised in all its magnitude.'

'The excess for the city of London as compared with the district above referred to, taken on an average of seven years, is shewn by the Registrar-General as follows:—

'The deaths registered in London (1838—44)
'under five years of age were	139,593
'The deaths, if the mortality had not been 'higher than in Lewisham, would have
'been	80,632
	58,961

"I shall feel obliged if you will have the kindness to inform me when the statement alluded to was made by the Registrar-General, and also forward me the statement of the reports from which such information was obtained.

(Signed) 'EDWARD TYRRELL.'

'George Graham, Esq.'

"General Register Office, 23rd June, 1848.

"Sir,—In reply to your letter of this day's date I have the honour of stating that, in the publication referred to by Lord Ashley when in correspondence with the Commissioners of Sewers of the city of London, I did not speak merely of the city of London within and without the walls, but I referred to the metropolis within the present bills of mortality, containing a population amounting in number to nearly two millions, AS YOU WILL SEE IN THE ACCOMPANYING RETURN which I now have the pleasure of transmitting to you.

(Signed) "GEORGE GRAHAM,
'Registrar-General.'

"E. Tyrrell, Esq.,
'City Remembrancer.'" (P. 23).

This last specimen may be taken as an example of a process in the new art of evidence, which, like that of club-hauling, is only to be used in desperate cases, that of direct forgery or falsification of testimony.

We had written thus far when we met with the pamphlet, intituled "A Few Words on the New Commission of Sewers," which we hope will go far to supply the want we have mentioned of a work on the new art of taking evidence, though the writer treats its professors with as little indulgence as the physical philosophers received at the hands of the Aristotelians. He says,

"When, however, reports are made, they ought to shew knowledge,—superior knowledge,—accurate information and great impartiality. The evidence ought to be clear and unbought. The witnesses ought to have been chosen for their knowledge and ability, not for their known prejudices and professional piques; they ought to have been cross-examined, not led; and when one or two witnesses, of character and ability, gave evidence contrary to the wishes of the Commissioners, they ought to have been listened to and encouraged, not snubbed and disregarded. The tribunal before which the evidence was produced ought to have had considerable knowledge; in general knowledge it ought to have been superior to the witnesses; it ought to have been unprejudiced, and composed of persons of independence. The reverse of all this we are sorry to say is the case. The reports betray the most lamentable ignorance on the part of the Commissioners, or a most sinister design. If an impartial inquiry had really been the object, why were not the proceedings carried on before the public? Why were not some of the ablest men in each district on the Com'mission? Why were not men of general knowledge called as evidence? Why were not some of the old Commissioners examined, to hear at least what they had to say for themselves? Because, we answer, a fair and impartial inquiry was not wanted. A simple reform of abuses, without éclat, without a large expenditure of money, was not wanted. The public must be frightened, and made to spend its money freely. That we are indebted for these reports to the same hands which so long held the noses of the poor to the grindstone,—which imposed the useless and expensive constabulary force upon the over-burdened counties,—we can hardly doubt. But they have lost their power. In the Constabulary Force Report we recognise undoubted talent in fiction, and a bold imagination. The witnesses had confidence in their leader, and they performed their task like Trojans. In the publications before us, a different set of witnesses do not exhibit the same confidence; they romance, but not so boldly or so well. We have heard them described as old women, but we cannot believe in their age; at all events it must be a green old age."

"In general the answer is suggested by the question in the most laughable manner. As thus: 'Canst you now pronounce with tolerable certainty in what places you will not find cases of typhus?' Answer: 'I believe I could.' We believe we could too, without being a Commissioner or a Bowie.

"Again: 'A strong conviction has been expressed and stated in evidence, by those who have paid attention to the subject, that there is almost as close a connexion between filth and crime as there is between filth and fever; do you coincide with this opinion?' 'I have long been of that opinion.' Of course he was, the Commissioners knew that, or he would not have been suffered to give his evidence: as a proof of which we will mention an anecdote connected with the manufacture of evidence.

"One of the present Commission, so celebrated for the getting up of evidence, met a gentleman of great scientific attainments, and addressed him thus:—'I want to prove that singing-birds when kept in slaughter-houses very soon die; does that accord with your observation?' 'On the contrary,' said the gentleman. 'I have heard many invalids recommended to live in slaughter-houses for the sake of their health, and many instances they have recovered, I believe.' 'Good morning, Sir,' says the getter-up of evidence. 'Do you think, gentle reader, the getter-up of evidence feated? By no means. It was easy to find some one with less knowledge or less honesty; and he was found."

"When the Commissioners are weary of keeping the game, and hazard, by way of relaxation, some guarded questions, we get the following recondit servations:—'What, however, is the general sanitary condition of merchant ships?'—'The accommodation of the smaller class of ships, especially coasters, is very confined: they are filthy, unpleasant, and unhealthy; some; the men often sleeping, feeding, and cooking in the same place, which is very badly cleaned and ventilated; frequently, moreover, considerable quantities of wet clothing are thrown upon their chests and boxes, or anywhere else they can place them.' 'Tis wonderful, O Bowie! We always thought, before we were informed to the contrary, that on ship-board the common sailors had a kitchen, parlour, and bed-room to themselves, with housemaids to keep them clean. No wonder a few of them get the cholera."

The author of the "Few Words" seems to forget that the way to generalize is to collect similar instances (instantiæ conformes). Among the infinite variety of facts and of opinions, how were the Commissioners to come to a conclusion if they did not select? In the next extract he is somewhat unfair. The inquiry was as to the origin of cholera, and, as a lawyer, he must know that the hearsay evidence of old women and children is admissible in questions of pedigree.

"A young lady whom I attended during a long and severe attack of typhus, frequently told me she attributed her illness to a very disagreeable smell she encountered while passing through Whitechapel-market." He goes on:—"Among the first cholera patients in London were the mate of a vessel lying off Hermitage, and the wife of a master of a small coasting-vessel lying off Horsleydown: both of them had the disease very severely. The mate told me he had not been well after getting up one morning very early and smelling something very offensive from a bone vessel lying a short distance from them. The master's wife said, she had never felt right since she had a sniff of bad yeast from some casks on shore. Within a few days after experiencing those smells, they were both attacked with cholera. You don't say so! They might both have broken their necks, which would have been a coincidence every whit as worthy of relation. We could tell a volume full of such stories if we had a Commission handy to believe and print them. We know of a farmer having died after having passed near a pig-sty. One man who passed near a cesspool was two days afterwards kicked out of his gig and had his leg broken. Mr. Bowie goes on:—"I remember a house in Hermitage-street where I think (he does not know) three of its inhabitants died of cholera: the ——— had not been cleared for several years. We remember a house where what he mentions had not been cleared out for twenty-two years, and nobody in it ever died of the cholera. One could string such stuff together by the yard, without ever having practised like Mr. Bowie in Scotland, or any where else.

"Are new laws to be enacted, and millions spent, on the evidence of men who can gravely utter such wretched trash; are young ladies' notions of the causes of their ailments, and the silly sick-bed gossipings of sick people to be put forth gravely, and printed for the information of men possessing mens sana in corpore sano? But let us be cautious—let us listen to a great authority in such matters.

"On the 13th December, at the Royal Institute of Ancient Architects, Mr. Edward P'Anson read a paper on the 'Principles and Practice of building Sewers in the Metropolis;' one passage of which was to the following effect:—

"To dispose of the gases generated in sewers was a difficult question. More was said about their dangerous qualities than was necessary. Some experiments were now going on, which he understood would establish this. The experimenter found it difficult to obtain a cube foot of poisonous gas from the sewers. A woman, who lived near one of the open street-gratings, had assured a friend of his that she had never been well till she came there. And it certainly was a fact, that when London was ravaged by the cholera, no case occurred amongst the workmen employed in the sewers."

The necessity for Mr. P'Anson's evidence has been superseded by the third report of the Sanitary Commission, laid before the House of Lords on the 14th, in which the song and burthen of their first two reports, the unhealthiness of effluvia from sewers, is disavowed, the special object being to prove that the new Commissioners did not bring the fever into Westminster. His third report is rich in scientific novelties.

The next extract shews that the Commissioners have not forgotten the maxim of the geometers, to assume nothing as self-evident which can be proved.

"To return to our story-telling friend:—he is asked, 'If the streets were well scraped, washed, and cleaned' would there not be a considerable diminution of dirt? 'Most assuredly there would. I have often heard it 'said (he, like the Commissioners, knows nothing of his own knowledge—they know nothing and send for him who knows nothing, but informs the other know-nothings what some young or old lady told him):—I have heard it said that clothes kept clean as long again in the country as in London.' It is scarcely credible such trash should not only be printed but put forward as something worth reading. Take the following, and we have done with Mr. Bowie.

"In irritation of the skin, what substitute may be used for soap? I have generally found thin gruel an excellent substitute, and sometimes, especially where there are sores or wounds, nothing answers better for soap in shaving than good olive oil."

The writer shews (p. 17, et seq.) that the only witnesses who differed from the opinions of the Commissioners have no mention made of them in the report, the public being thus led to believe that there was no difference, that there could be no difference, on the questions mooted in the report. He also shews, (p. 35), the examining Commissioner's endeavour to bait Mr. Grainger into saying what he knew was nowhere proved.

It was Mr. Tickell, we think, who wrote the Life of Lord Bacon, and forgot that he was a philosopher; and so the author of the "Few Words" appears to be sand blind to the science or art displayed in these feats of the Commissioners. The following extract, indeed, conclusively proves how incapable he is of estimating the new philosophy.

"We call upon all reasonable men, all rate-payers, and especially the Legislature, to examine for themselves, and not to take upon hearsay the evidence upon which is founded this monstrous cheat,—this invention for plundering the public.

"We have demonstrated, as far as the nature of a Pamphlet will permit, the mere shew of knowledge possessed by the Commissioners, the charlatanism of many of their witnesses, and the twaddle the whole confederation indulge in. Is there no one in Parliament to expose them? It is an easy game, and there is no one to play it? A large portion of the press is muzzled. The fiercest enemy of the ex-secretary is dumb, or only roars at his bidding.

"Never, we believe, was such a superstructure endeavoured to be raised on such a weak foundation. A few medical men are called, who tell gossiping stories about the cholera; then come the officers of the late Commission, who abuse their masters, and dilate upon their pet plans; then a few C. E.'s are called, who are very learned, and very positive, about the tile-drains, though they have never been generally tried, or for any sufficient time: also upon the shape of drains they are quite as positive, though they do not agree with each other on that point. Decimals, squares, and cubes are indulged in pretty freely, and remind one of the old question,—'If a leg of mutton costs 5s., how much will a bunch of turnips cost?' The C. E.'s are followed by the savans, whose science is bewildering to every body concerned; and then comes the conclusion,—May it please your Majesty, 'We, your dearly beloved, &c., recommend you to dismiss every body, and put us into their places. We find the cholera is likely, in all probability, unless prevented, to come into England, and we are the only persons to prevent it. Consolidation is the remedy. Consolidate all the places, create new salaries, and give them to us.

"This may appear burlesque, but it is the pith and substance of the Reports.

"Let the Commission be judged by their own Reports and evidence. They wrote them; they packed the evidence, and excluded all but their own trained witnesses. The Commissioners have published them to the world as the grounds of their proceedings, and by them we judge them, and by them alone.

"If they have good reasons for what they have done,—if they have evidence that the cholera is more likely to appear this year than last, or the last twenty years, we boldly say, they are not to be found in these books. If the late Commissions wanted reform,—if they were partial, unjust, and ignorant,—if they lavishly spent the public money, and neglected their duties, the evidence is not to be found in these books. Never before, in the history of legislation, was such a conclusion drawn from such premises.

"A cry has been got up, founded on a silly fear; and this stupendous job will be carried into effect, in the shape of the most obnoxious laws, unless those who have the knowledge and energy requisite come forward and petition, in bold but respectful language, the House of Lords, (if it is too late to petition the Commons), to free us from the 'old man of the sea,'—this 'tyranny.'"

LONDON, JULY 29, 1848.

WE return to the subject of reform in equity pleading and practice, for the purpose of considering the effect of existing orders and practice, with reference to that which, in the Memorial of the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association, is proposed to be done by bringing causes to a hearing on petition. It has been suggested to us, that the same effect as that which is proposed by the solicitors to be attained through the medium of a petition, may be attained by the machinery provided by the 52nd and subsequent Orders of 1845, relating to the filing of a traversing note. It will be recollected that, by the 52nd Order, if a defendant has not pleaded, answered, or demurred, not demurring alone, within the proper time, the plaintiff may file a traversing note, which, being served on the defendant, will have the same effect as if the defendant had filed a full answer, or further answer, traversing the whole bill, or such parts of the bill as the note relates to. The traversing note is not the effect of a denial on oath of the allegations in the bill, (Martin v. Norman, 2 Hare, 596), but amounts simply to a refusal to admit them, and puts the plaintiff to prove his case. The cause being in this state, issue may be joined by the plaintiff filing replication; and then it is said, that, if the parties can agree, or have agreed beforehand, the cause may be heard on admissions; and that thus all the advantage proposed by the untried machinery of petitions, (untried, at least, for such a purpose), would be obtained by machinery already existing. If the question were merely whether, by arrangement out of court, existing practice may be moulded so as to dispense with much of the machinery of a contested suit, there would certainly not be much difficulty in acceding to the suggestion of trying the traversing note before attempting any further innovation. If, indeed, that were the only question, there are other modes, also, in which the existing practice might be so twisted as to dispense with much of the machinery of a contested case. For instance, if a bill is prepared with the approbation of all parties as to the facts, so as to raise the questions of law on which a decision is desired, a demurrer might, in many cases, enable the parties to obtain all they seek by the suit; or answers merely submitting the rights of the defendants might be put in, and at the hearing the defendants might be instructed to admit all the allegations of the bill. But the question is not merely whether, by an irregular use, or even by a regular use, of proceedings intended for one purpose, another purpose may be obtained, but whether it is not more convenient that the practice should be intended for the end to which it is applied; and that parties should be proceeding, not by evading rules, but under and in accordance with them. No one has ever attempted in Chancery proceedings to take irregular proceedings, legal cross-roads as it were, without regretting that he had done so once, and vowing that he would never do so a second time. The reason is obvious. A proceeding intended for one purpose may, by apt and cunning bending, be applied to the performance of another purpose. But the subsequent steps that have to be taken, for carrying out fully the one purpose or the other, may be so different, that they will in the one case be consistent with, and in the other inconsistent with, the principle of the proceeding. Hence, in the one case, all will go on, from the beginning to the end, smoothly and regularly; in the other there will be frequent obstructions, more or less difficult to be overcome. We doubt, on these grounds, whether the existence of the machinery provided by the Traversing-note Orders, is a sufficient reason for rejecting the consideration of the proposal made in the Memorial referred to, for introducing a proceeding by petition; admitting, at the same time, that, in many cases, the proceeding by traversing note and admissions, may be found to answer perfectly well for the hearing of a cause.

Before concluding this subject, we will offer for the consideration of Chancery practitioners a few observations on the machinery which may be requisite for carrying into effect vivâ-voce examination for the hearing of a Chancery suit. To a uniform practice of examination vivâ-voce at the hearing, this objection presents itself: that from the nature of Chancery business, and in particular from the great length to which the proceedings sometimes extend, the period of the coming on of a cause to be heard is much more uncertain than even at law; and that if witnesses were to be brought to London, as they must be, from the time when a cause may be in the day's paper, and kept there until the cause is actually heard, or till, on the ground of its standing over or otherwise, they can be safely remanded, enormous expense would be occasioned. The remedy which has, we believe, been long suggested for this is, that there should be a special examining judge or officer, before whom the examination of witnesses in all causes should be taken vivâ-voce, and the depositions taken down and preserved in writing for the use of the judge who is to try the cause. This plan would have some advantages, and would be open to some objections. It would possess the principal advantage of the proceeding by vivâ-voce evidence, that of suggesting to the examiner himself a course of examinations resulting from unexpected answers. But it would fail to give to the judge deciding the case that which at law is found also of such great utility, the opportunity of observing the demeanour of the witness. Of the value of this nothing need be said; it is too well and generally admitted to require argument. But it appears to us not absolutely essential that either of the two plans—that of taking all evidence at the hearing of the cause, or taking it all preliminarily before an examining judge, should be adopted. It might well be left to the parties to take it either preliminarily before an examining judge, or at the hearing before the judge hearing the cause, as they should think most for their advantage; checking the power of oppression that the proceedings, by way of keeping witnesses in town, might give to a wealthy suitor, by allowing him in costs, if successful, only such charges for attendance of witnesses as he would have had to pay if he had examined his witnesses before the examining judge. Of course it would be essential to any system, assuming the advantage of vivâ-voce evidence, that the judge hearing the cause, should have power to require any witness to be examined vivâ-voce before him. This could occasion no material expense, because the judge could always fix a specific time for the examination of the witness or witnesses, and appoint the cause to be heard peremptorily on that day.

The Queen has been pleased to appoint Lemuel A. Wilnot, Esq., to be her Majesty's Attorney-General for the province of New Brunswick.

An Index to the Statute Law of England, to the Close of the Session 10 & 11 Vict. (1847). By GEORGE STAMP. 12mo. Pp. 380.

Unlike the Iliad in a nutshell, this performance is a feat of compression as useful as it is astonishing. Nothing short of seeing the thing done would have convinced us that the existing statute law of England could be indexed to any useful purpose in a small pocket volume. Never, since the adventure of the Eastern Fisherman, has the essence of so vast a fog been condensed into so small a vessel. We have tested the completeness of the Index by numerous random references, and have detected no omission except such as the author fairly confesses to in his preface; and we have generally found the object of our search under the most appropriate and obvious head—at least that which appeared so to us—a point whereon, recollecting the extraordinary puzzles frequently appended to reports and treatises under the name of indexes, we do not expect any uniformity of opinion.

The explanation of Mr. Stamp's success cannot be better given than in his own words, which will explain at once the merit of his plan, and the good sense which was necessary to the execution of it:—

"One, and the principal, means by which the materials have been condensed into so small a compass has been the making of the book an Index, not to THE STATUTES, but to THE PRESENT STATUTE LAW. It were difficult to estimate the extent to which the observance of this distinction has reduced the bulk of the work, without, as I think, diminishing its utility. A long array, under nearly every head, of all the acts, past and present, on the subject to which it refers, might, no doubt, occasionally be found useful, but I am satisfied that such an overloading of a mere index, by the intermixture of extinct and existing laws, would, from its tendency to confuse more than counterbalance the occasional advantage. With some exceptions, therefore, the statutes, or parts of statutes which have been repealed, have not been noticed. The exceptions are cases where laws, although repealed, still possess some lasting interest. An example on each side will illustrate the distinction. In criminal law, for instance, the repealed statutes are of so much import to the practitioner of the present day, as to have, therefore, been omitted—while repealed laws relating to real property still affect titles, and have been on that account retained. In a few instances, too, references have been given to statutes no longer in force, either on the ground of the historical interest they possess, or because they shew the progress of the law to its present state. Under the head PARLIAMENT, for example, are several acts of the former, and under the head ARREST, some of the latter, class. Under every title, however, whether the repealed statutes are included or not, care has been taken so to frame the references, that the existing law on the subject may be readily traced.

"Another great help to conciseness has been the omission, with very few exceptions, of the statutes which relate exclusively to Scotland or Ireland. The Index having been intended as a compendium of English statute law, and with a view to the requirements of an English practice, it was felt that the acts relating to the other portions of the United Kingdom would be a needless incumbrance, and ought to be omitted. For the same reason but few of the statutes relating to the colonies have been noticed. Such of the English statutes too as are but of local or personal application, although printed among the public general statutes, have been excluded.

"A third material retrenchment has been the omission, with some exceptions, of the statutes which concern, not the public generally, but particular classes only. The laws for regulating various branches of manufacture and particular trades, and the minute provisions of the excise laws, as applicable to the different subjects of excise regulations, are examples of this class. There are some statutes, however, which although referring immediately to particular branches of industry, yet connect themselves closely with the ordinary concerns of life, and to such, by way of exception, a reference has been given. The acts under the titles BREAD, ALHOUSES, BUILDING, &c., are instances of this kind. The legislation affecting a few other particular avocations has involved in its discussion the great questions of humanity; and the statutes on those subjects, from the interest they thus possess, have been included. I allude to the acts under the heads FACTORIES, CHIMNEY SWEEPERS, COLLIERIES, &c. To use the words of Sir William Evans, in the Preface to his valuable collection of statutes, and which are equally applicable to such a work as the present, "In forming a collection of this kind, it is difficult to fix the precise limits between the acts which it would be desirable to admit, and those which it is proper to exclude, and the decision must necessarily involve a certain degree of arbitrary discretion upon which no two judgments would exactly coincide; but upon the great majority of cases there will probably not be any material difference of opinion; and I hope it will not be found, upon a review of the tables of contents, that many acts of general practical utility have been omitted, or that the bulk of the work has been much increased by those which could have been conveniently dispensed with." I may add, that the range of subjects admitted into the present index is considerably wider than that adopted by Sir William Evans, and his learned editors, in the work to which I have alluded. It may also be proper to observe, that no acts which otherwise fell within the scope of the present work have been excluded, on the ground merely that they have become obsolete."

The omission of the statutes which concern particular classes only is perhaps to be regretted. Those statutes might have been briefly referred to, without increasing the book by many pages. On the next important question, the mode of referring to the selected statutes, Mr. Stamp observes:—

"The first object at which I have aimed is to make the book an index, not of dry words merely, but of subjects, by such a disposition of the matter as that, either by direct notices or by references to other titles, each head should afford a clue to the entire existing statute law affecting the particular subject. In this, as in a former particular, a degree of arbitrary discretion is necessarily involved, but I trust the arrangement of subjects will be sufficiently intelligible, and that most of the matter will be found in the place or places where an English lawyer would be most likely to look for it.

"Next to the arrangement of the matter came the question, with what degree of particularity it would be proper to detail it. On this point it was difficult to act upon any unvarying rule. It will be remembered that the work is but an index, and that (compared with the bulk of the statute book, from which it has been extracted) on the most concise scale. To have given an epitome of the statute law on such a scale would have been impossible, and, if possible, would have been comparatively useless. No mere epitome of an act of Parliament can be relied on, and on every important occasion reference must necessarily be had to the act itself. Still it has been felt, that, for many purposes, details going somewhat beyond a naked reference to each statute might be usefully employed. With more or less particularity, therefore, according to the importance of the subject, or its capability of being so handled, such short details have been given; and in almost every case in which the effect of an enactment could be stated in a few words, it has been so stated. I believe it will be found that, for many purposes, the work may thus be used as a legal hand-book, without the necessity of referring to the statute-book itself. The plan adopted with regard to details has led, in some instances, to what may possibly be regarded as an anomaly, and which it may, therefore, be well to explain. It will be best illustrated by an example. Under the head TURNPIKES, the notice of the last General Turnpike Act, with its lengthy and important provisions, occupies a space of but two lines, while some of the subsequent and much shorter acts by which it is amended, are given at greater length, by the introduction of particulars. The cause of this apparent anomaly is simply this: The General Turnpike Act is so long, and its provisions so multifarious, that it were vain to attempt to abridge it, but many of the later acts are such as to allow of their design being indicated in a few words. And however unseemly at the first glance, it may be doubtful whether the arrangement thus necessitated be not, on the whole, the most convenient. The practitioner or the student, who needs to refer to the provisions of the General Turnpike Act, must of necessity examine the act itself as the foundation of the present law, and for that purpose a mere clue to the statute is sufficient. But the acts by which the law relating to turnpikes has been since, in some way or other, altered, are no less than fifty; and it may be a great convenience to the student to see, not merely where those acts may be found, but to have the particular object of each, wherever practicable, indicated. He may be seeking information on a single point, and, by the help of such an indication, it may suffice to examine five of the subsequent statutes instead of the fifty. What is here said of the turnpike acts is only an example, there are numerous other instances in which the same remarks would apply. The considerations thus suggested were decisive of the general plan which has been pursued, namely, wherever it was practicable, and consistent with the proposed limits of the work, to state shortly what the law is; in all other cases to shew, by a simple reference, where the law may be found."

Part of the wonder excited by the first comparison of the dimensions of this Index with those of the Statutes at Large, is removed by the following explanation:—

"The statute law of this country is not in a creditable state. It bears the plainest marks of hasty and ill-considered legislation, it is extremely inartificial, and has become involved to a most inconvenient degree; but I question whether, after all, at any time during the last thirty years, the body of existing statute law has been in a much narrower compass than now. Session after session indeed has added its volume to the already overgrown mass, but session after session has also, by the process of repeal and consolidation, struck off something that was cumbersome and superfluous from that mass. The extent to which this has been carried is perhaps scarcely appreciable, except by those whose pursuits have led to a very close examination of the statute book. The consolidation of the jury laws and the bankrupt law in 1826, of different sections of the criminal law in 1827 and 1828, of the post-office laws in 1837, and the repeated consolidations of the laws of customs, shipping, and navigation, may be mentioned as examples, in which, by direct repeal, innumerable old and confused enactments have been swept away, and replaced by a more intelligible code. And it is not by direct repeal alone

'that the bulk of the efficient statute law of the country has been reduced. The 36th section of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, for instance, which abolished a long list of real and mixed actions, virtually struck off from the statute-book all the countless provisions of the ancient statutes referring to such actions, which provisions, however unusual those actions had become, were up to that time in full vitality.'

Such is Mr. Stamp's Index, the smallest and the most useful guide to the statute book that has yet been seen.

LONDON, AUGUST 5, 1848.

It is often said, in reference to the minor criminal proceedings of our Courts, and particularly in reference to proceedings in the police courts, that there is one law for the rich and another for the poor; the utterers of the sentiment meaning thereby, that the rich have an advantage before the law. Whether this is true or not we shall not here stop to inquire; but certain it is that the proposition holds good in the higher branches of our civil judicature, and that there is one law for the rich and another for the poor, in this sense, that the hopelessly poor have a power of annoyance and oppression conceded to them, which makes rich men tremble at the thoughts of defending against a pauper. The amount of harassment and expense that may be occasioned by a pauper suitor to a dives opponent, would indeed be almost inconceivable to any but professional men, who see continually before their eyes the way in which the protection thrown by the custom of English law round poor suitors, works in practice.

A person hopelessly poor has, as is well known, the right to sue or defend without costs, and is entitled to have a counsel and attorney assigned to him. He has also, in common with every other suitor, the right to dispense with both counsel and attorney, and to conduct his own case in person. The combination of these two privileges operates in a most pernicious manner, not only upon the rights of the parties opposed in litigation to paupers, but upon those of the public. The way it works is this: at the commencement of a suit, a pauper suitor is generally well pleased and ready to avail himself of the gratuitous professional services that the practice of the Courts, aided by the liberality of the Profession, offers him. He likes to launch his case, and probably then means to conduct it throughout, in a regular manner. While the case is thus proceeding under the advice and sanction of counsel, there is at least some guarantee that the pauper's opponent will not be continually harassed with applications to the Court, on the face of them hopeless, or nearly so, and, therefore, productive to him of quite unnecessary expense. But if, after a while, the result of the proceedings shews to the pauper suitor's legal advisers that he has, as very frequently happens in pauper suits, no reasonable ground for proceeding, then, instead of doing what, under such circumstances, a dives suitor usually does, namely, yielding to the decree of fate, and compromising or otherwise putting an end to the suit, the pauper suitor usually attributes to the error of his counsel that which depends on the inherent weakness of his case, and, relying on his own prowess, and defying all lawyers, takes his suit into his own hands. Henceforth there is neither peace nor safety for his unfortunate opponent. He is harassed by all sorts of motions, petitions, and other interlocutory applications, by which he may lose, but cannot gain. That they are hopeless is usually not seen by the pauper suitor, who, excited by the ardour of litigation and the opportunity of display, forces them on, in spite of any gratuitous advice that he may still, perhaps, occasionally receive, reckless of the result, which he, as well as his hapless opponent, knows cannot hurt him if he fails, because he pays no costs, but may much hurt his opponent, if, by some unforeseen chance, he should succeed. Thus much for the injuries that the opponent of a pauper suitor may sustain at his hands. The oppression that he may exercise against the public consists in the fearful waste of public time, and the delay to the business of other suitors, that he has it in his power to inflict, by occupying the attention of Courts of justice with frivolous applications, conducted with an almost ostentatious disregard of all attempt at brevity. To no one is so much indulgence extended by the Courts as to the pauper suitor conducting his suit in person. Irrelevant argument, the tedious reading of rambling evidence verbatim, iterations, and all manner of modes of consuming time, which in any counsel would be instantly repressed, if, indeed, counsel could be found sufficiently ignorant and indiscreet to attempt them, are suffered by the judge when they proceed from a pauper suitor appearing in person, not because he believes such indulgence to be really deserved, but partly in deference to the notion sanctified into a sort of constitutional principle, that the subject has a right to sue or defend in person, and must, while so doing, be indulgently treated, and partly because to check the redundancies and impertinences of such persons is a task which the most able judges find beyond their powers. The injustice thus done to the opponents of pauper suitors and to the public, by means of reckless waste of judicial time, is enormous.

And on what, after all, does the imagined right of pauper suitors to work such evils rest? Why should it be in the power of any man, simply because he has nothing, to proceed in the business of litigation, without regard to those rules that are made for the general convenience and the general saving of time? We confidently assert, that the excessive indulgence shewn to pauper suitors is a blot upon our system of judicature, and that mercy to them ought not to be obtained at the expense of cruelty to every body else. Nor is it necessary that mercy to them should be so obtained; as much as they are fairly entitled to, might well be combined with justice to their opponents and to the public. For this purpose, however, it would be requisite to discard the popular notion, that every man is entitled to defend his own cause in person—a notion more attractive in theory than just or beneficial in practice. Every man is entitled to protection in the assertion of his rights or what he believes to be his rights. But he is not of necessity entitled to choose his own mode of proceeding; and there is no more reason why he should be permitted to proceed in person, and in so doing, through ignorance and irresponsibility, to break down all the guards interposed by the rules of practice for the express purpose of preventing waste of time, than that he should be allowed to choose to take his case to the wrong Court.

Suitors, then, we say, ought not to be permitted to appear in person; on the other hand, they ought to be provided, if they cannot themselves procure it, with legal assistance; and if that cannot be procured without pecuniary equivalent, a fund should be provided by the State for the purpose. We apprehend, however, that there would not be any need of any such provision. With a little arrangement, pauper cases might be so distributed among the Profession, as not to make it a hardship on any one to take his turn; and it would be a point of honour with those undertaking such cases to protect the client to the utmost, subject only, as in the case of dives clients, to the duty that counsel and attorneys owe to the Court, to common sense, and to their own reputation.

MEMBER RETURNED TO SERVE IN PARLIAMENT.—The Hon. Francis Baring, for the borough of Thetford, in the room of the Hon. William Baring, now Lord Ashburton, called up to the House of Peers.

THE SYSTEM OF LAW REPORTS.

In the pages of a cotemporary* there is an able article on the subject of the present state of Law reporting. Agreeing with the writer in much of what he says as to the defects that exist in our modern system of reporting, we do not, however, agree with him in casting the blame of it so exclusively on the reporters; nor do we agree with his extreme sympathy with the wrong sustained by the Profession at the hands of the reporters.

"The system of reporting," says the writer in The Law Magazine, "as now carried on is become a serious evil and calls loudly for reform. Instead of a collection of judicial decisions, with the facts necessary to support them, and the grounds upon which they are made, carefully and briefly set out, we have volumes upon volumes of reported cases, in which the points important to be known bear but a small proportion to the mass of useless, undigested matter with which the volumes are filled. The inconveniences of such a system are evident, instead of having to read through a few pages, and obtaining a clear comprehension of a particular point, we have to wade through an enormous quantity of matter, which, so far from throwing additional light upon the subject, confuses, by the numerous doubts and difficulties by which each case is surrounded; the consequence is, we do not obtain that certainty in the law which it should be the object of all reports to accomplish. Besides this, a considerable expense is thereby entailed upon us, to whom these reports are necessary. The price of a volume increases in proportion to its size, and so we have to pay largely for that with which we should be only too glad to dispense, were we not compelled to put up with it for the sake of the small quantity of valuable matter it contains, and which one ought to have in a more convenient form and at a much cheaper rate. Nor is this all; be it said, causes which we shall afterwards explain, we are compelled to provide ourselves with other volumes containing a greater portion of the same matter, so that on the whole we are forced to pay annually a much larger sum for reports than either there is any occasion for, or we have any inclination to indulge in. The mischief is obvious, and very generally felt. A reformation is wanted, though it would seem difficult to carry out in proportion to the extent and inveteracy of the evil, but if we can do anything towards it by the suggestions we are about to offer, we shall be well satisfied."

No doubt the law reports of the present time are, with few creditable exceptions, not what reports should be. Some are a mere statement of the nature of the case, too crudely set out to shew the points of it, followed by the names of the counsel, a list of the cases, and the judgment verbatim. Others are habitually a recapitulation of the pleadings, of the arguments at great length, and a statement of the judgments at great shortness. Others are little more altogether than marginal notes should be. No one can read the reports and not see that there is much to reform in the whole system. But the question is, on whom lies the burthen of the duty, —to whom should be attributed the chief blame? We say fearlessly, not to the reporters, but to the Profession generally. The reporters are but the suppliers of the literary wants of the Profession: they furnish such a supply as their judgment suggests, and they find it taken off their hands. Hence they infer reasonably, that it is suited to the taste of the Profession, since they cannot think men so foolish as to continue buying and reading what they do not want or find useful. To ask, however, of hardship imposed on the Profession by the reporters is ridiculous. If the reports are not satisfactory, the Profession need not buy them, and the fair is at an end. If, knowing what they are, they buy them, it is their choice, and they have nothing to complain of. The public might just as well complain of the hardship of Mr. Turner choosing to paint everything yellow, or of Rubini choosing to sing in a tremulous voice. Reports are simply books, which A. writes and which B. may buy or not, as it pleases him. B. has a full right to criticise; but he has no right to talk of any wrong being done to him, because A. does not write as well as he could wish.

Discarding this question, let us proceed to inquire what is the cause of reporting being conducted as it is. We apprehend there are several causes. One is, the mode in which reporters are selected; another is, the mode in which reporting is remunerated; a third is, the want of accommodation afforded to reporters by those who have the means of procuring for them the perusal of the papers in a cause. As to the first cause, reporters should be selected in one of two ways. The first is wholly with reference to their legal and literary ability by the judge of the Court, in which case they should be bonâ fide official persons, removable for neglect by the power that appointed them: no reports but theirs should be permitted to be cited; and, so far as the Court has power, it should prevent any other reports being taken. This, we apprehend, is a mode which, whether good or not, would ill assort with the taste and notions of the times, and could not be carried into effect. Such a perfect and official monopoly, with its consequent responsibilities, being impracticable, the only other mode in which the best attainable reports can be obtained is, by discarding all attempts at authoritative appointment of reporters, and leaving reporting as completely open as professional business, or general legal composition.

We have discarded the first system; we have not yet arrived at the second. Reporters are now selected by a sort of intermediate system,—partly monopoly, partly free; the result is, that while there is no responsibility to the Court, or in the reporter recognised as the reporter of the Court, there is, by a sort of tacit understanding among the Profession, an idea that Mr. A., the reporting reporter, is an exclusively authorised person; and whether he turns out to be an able reporter or not—whether he is diligent or not—it is not the etiquette for any other gentleman at the Bar to compose and publish reports while Mr. A. continues his. Nay, were he to do so, the very men who are continually abusing Mr. A.'s reports, and complaining of being obliged to buy bad reports, would refuse to buy any others, and would consider the new reporter as a person wanting in professional delicacy. In effect, at present, a reporter is elected as if his office were not to be a monopoly. In reality, it is a monopoly, without responsibility.

The second cause of bad reporting is, as we have said, the mode of remuneration. Every one who knows anything of reporting knows that the reporter's remuneration is measured by the number of sheets composing his production, just as the conveyancer's remuneration is measured by the number of folios of his draft. We are far from saying or believing that any counsel will make his reports long merely for the purpose of swelling his remuneration. But we say of this, as we have frequently said of drafting, that counsel have no inducement offered to their feelings of self-interest, to expend extra time in abbreviating. Reporters, we believe, do, as it is, spend much time in pruning, that is, literally in diminishing their incomes. But it is too much to expect of them that they should sacrifice themselves wholly for the public good; and while the Profession grumble at the high price of reports, and will persist in measuring the price they are content to pay for books by their size, it is not for them to censure reporters for not being as short as they might be, by bestowing on their already laborious task double the labour they do apply.

The third cause that we have pointed out is of a purely practical kind, but it is not without its operation in increasing the difficulty of producing good reports.

The removal of all these causes is in the hands of the Profession, not of the reporters. Let the production of reports be as fully, as freely open to every Barrister, as are the selection of a subject for, and the composition of, any other literary work. Let the Profession buy reports as they would pictures, not comparing the price with the size, but with the quality, and we should soon find, with reports as with other books, that the best men would obtain, by the manifestation of their superiority, exclusive possession of the field, and would retain their places as favourite reporters so long as they continued to execute their tasks ably and diligently, and no longer.

LONDON, AUGUST 12, 1848.

THE important and beneficial statute, known as Lord Denman's Act, for improving the Law of Evidence, (6 & 7 Vict. c. 85), expressly provides against such a construction of its provisions as would render competent "any party to any suit, action, or proceeding individually named in the record." It does not render them incompetent, but leaves them exactly in the position which they occupied before its enactment, and therefore they must be considered with reference to that position, whenever the question of their competency arises.

The question cannot be raised so long as they retain their original character of parties to the record, without the intervention of any change in such character. One of several plaintiffs cannot be dropped by the way, or undergo such an alteration as ever to be admissible to the witness box in his action; but one of several defendants has the power of suffering judgment by default, and is liable to a nolle prosequi, or a separate verdict, and by one of these means it sometimes happens that he loses his interest in the action so far as to be rendered a competent witness.

A person is not disqualified merely because he is a party to the record, but only where he is such party, and has an interest in the event. Take away the interest and he becomes qualified, though his name may remain upon the record. The language of Tindal, C. J., in Worrall v. Jones (7 Bing. 398) is very clear on this point. "No case has been cited, nor can any be found, in which a witness has been refused, upon the objection in the abstract that he was a party to the suit. On the contrary, many have been brought forward, in which parties to the suit, who suffered judgment by default, have been admitted as witnesses against their own interest."

VOL. XII.

EE

In the present article, we propose to consider the effect of a judgment by default in rendering one of several defendants a competent witness.

In actions ex contractu, it is clear that he cannot be made a witness for his co-defendant, as in such cases, if the plaintiff fail against one, he fails against all, even against such as have let judgment go by default. The witness, therefore, would have a direct interest in causing such failure.

But for this very reason, it would seem that he should be a competent witness for the plaintiff in actions ex contractu. He now comes to establish his co-defendant's, and therefore his own, liability; if his co-defendant be not liable, the witness escapes altogether; if he be found to be liable, the utmost which the witness can look for from him is contribution; and accordingly, it was held in Pipe v. Steel and Harvey, (2 Q. B. Rep. 733), that in such a case he may be called for the plaintiff.

In actions ex delicto, it was uncertain until lately whether a defendant, having suffered judgment by default, was a competent witness for his co-defendant; but it is now decided, that, in such case, he is not competent. (Thorpe v. Barber, 17 Law Journ., N. S., C. P., 113). The decision proceeded upon the ground, that the same jury who try the issue between the plaintiff and the defendant who has pleaded, also assess the damages against the defendant who has suffered judgment by default, and he has a direct interest in reducing such damages to the smallest possible amount. He appears to be incompetent, even though he be called for another purpose than that of reducing the damages: it was said by Williams, J., "Whatever may have been the professed intention for calling the co-defendant, he was inadmissible as a witness, for his evidence must have affected the amount of the damages. I should be sorry to add to those inconvenient and in-malous cases, in which it has been decided that a witness may be called for one purpose, but not for another."

In ejectment, the damages being merely nominal, where a defendant has suffered judgment by default for such part as is claimed against him, he probably would be held competent for his co-defendant. (See Bull. N. P. 285, 286).

It has been ruled at Nisi Prins that a defendant who has suffered judgment by default in an action of tort, is not a competent witness for the plaintiff. (Chapman v. Graves, 2 Camp. 333, n.). But the reasons given for the decision are unsatisfactory, being, first, that the witness was called to inculpate the defendant, which merely amounts to a statement that he was called for the plaintiff; and, secondly, that, as a general rule, a party to the record was not admissible. We have seen, however, from Worrall v. Jones, that no such rule exists; and, indeed, this case of Chapman v. Graves is said by Maule, J., in Thorpe v. Barber, to have been overruled by Worrall v. Jones. Also in Doe v. Green, (4 Esp. 198), Lord Ellenborough admitted for the plaintiff, the evidence of a defendant who had suffered judgment by default in ejectment. It is difficult to see any direct interest which a defendant has in fixing his co-defendant in an action of tort. There is no contribution between wrong-doers.

BRITISH COPYRIGHT IN FOREIGN WORKS.

By the statute 8 Ann. c. 19, (extended to Ireland by the 41 Geo. 3, c. 107, and altered and amended by the 54 Geo. 3, c. 156), the copyright or "sole liberty of printing and reprinting" for a certain term was secured to "the authors of books then published, and also to the author of any book or books already composed, and not printed or published, or that shall hereafter be composed, and his assignee or assignees." The place of publication is not mentioned, but it has never been doubted that publication within the realm was intended*. The statute of Anne imposed penalties on persons printing, reprinting, or importing "any such books" without license. The 41 Geo. 3, c. 107, s. 1, increased the penalties imposed by the statute of Anne, and also gave to the proprietors of the copyright a special action on the case. But by the 7th section it was also enacted, that it should not be lawful to import for sale any printed book "first composed, written, or printed and published in the United Kingdom, and reprinted in any other country," under certain penalties, with a proviso, that no person should be liable to such penalties for importing books which had not been reprinted in the United Kingdom for twenty years, or books forming the part of a collection, of which the greater part should have been first composed or written abroad. The case of simultaneous publication at home and abroad was not provided for. The 54 Geo. 3, c. 156, s. 3, repeats the prohibition on importation contained in sect. 1 of the 41 Geo. 3, c. 107.

A temporary act of 12 Geo. 2, c. 36, (continued by various acts, the last being the 29 Geo. 3, c. 55), contained an enactment similar to that in the 7th section of the 41 Geo. 3, c. 107. This was afterwards incorporated in the 34 Geo. 3, c. 20, (an act for granting an excise on paper, &c.), sect. 57. Before the repeal of that act by the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 23, the enactment had appeared in the prohibitory clauses of the Customs Acts. See 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 52, s. 58, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 37, s. 23, (where the exception as to books not printed within twenty years, or imported as part of a collection, is abolished, and a previous notice of the copyright and its duration is required to be given to the Commissioners of Customs), 8 & 9 Vict. c. 86, s. 63. Importation of pirated copies into the Colonies is prohibited by the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 93, s. 9.

The statute of Anne, as modified by the 54 Geo. 3, c. 156, continued in force until the 1st July, 1842, when it was repealed by the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, except so far as might be necessary for carrying on suits then pending, or "for enforcing any cause of action or suit, or any right or contract then subsisting."

The stat. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, s. 3, enacts, "that the copyright in every book which shall after the passing of this act be published," shall endure for the term therein mentioned. The place of publication is not mentioned, but the 6th section, requiring a copy of every book printed after the passing of the act to be delivered at the British Museum within one month after publication within the bills of mortality, or three months after publication in any other part of the United Kingdom, or twelve months after publication in any other part of the British dominions, (explained to mean all the colonies, settlements, and possessions of the Crown), and also the 15th section, giving a remedy by action on the case for piracy committed in any part of the British dominions, clearly shew that the whole of the British dominions was intended to be made one district for the purposes of copyright. Sect. 29, which extends the operation of the act to every part of the British dominions. And see 10 & 11 Vict. c. 36. The 17th section of the Copyright Act, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, prohibits the importation for sale or hire into any part of the United Kingdom, or any other part of the British dominions, of any printed book first composed or written, or printed and published in any part of the United Kingdom wherein there shall be copyright. This clause is taken from the earlier acts, and seems to assume that the copyright conferred by the act arises only where there is a first publication within the United Kingdom; but it cannot, we conceive, control the effect of the general words of the 3rd section, as explained by the 6th, 15th, and 29th.

So far as concerns the works of foreign authors the two acts seem to require the same construction. Publication in the United Kingdom (or, now, in any British possession) by the author or his assignee is the origin and foundation of the copyright under each of the acts. The various enactments expressly forbidding the importation of foreign reprints of works first composed or written or printed and published in this country, do not apply to infringements of the copyright in such works by reprints in this country, but it is an important question whether those enactments (i. e. sect. 7 of the 41 Geo. 3, c. 107, and sect. 17 of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45) do not put a construction upon the general clauses conferring copyright.

right, and shew that no copyright was intended to be created in any work not first composed or written or printed and published in this country. In Chappell v. Purday (14 Mee. & W. 321) the Court suggested that that might be the effect of the 7th section of the 41 Geo. 3, c. 107, that the protection was co-extensive with the right to be secured. But, as we have seen that the 17th section of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, cannot reasonably be held to control the 3rd, so as to confine its operation to the limit in respect of place mentioned in the 17th, so it should not, we think, have any such operation with respect to the time then mentioned. Before, however, we proceed to the cases, we must mention another enactment, which has been until recently overlooked, probably, because it forms part of a statute the main provisions of which have not yet been called into operation,—the International Copyright Act. The 14th section of the first International Copyright Act, 1 & 2 Vict. c. 89, (31st July, 1838), enacted that "The author of any book to be after the passing of this act first published out of her Majesty's dominions, or his assignees, shall have no copyright therein within her Majesty's dominions, otherwise than such (if any) as he may become entitled to under this act." Now if it was already the law that there could be no copyright without a first publication here, this enactment, which impliedly allows of a copyright in works published here and abroad simultaneously, was not only superfluous, but inaccurately expressed,—as it seems to have been also in not distinguishing between the United Kingdom and the British Colonies. A similar provision is contained in the act now in force, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 12, s. 19.

In D'Almaine v. Boosey, (1 You. & C., Exch., 288), it was decided, under the statute of Anne, that a foreign composer residing abroad might assign his copyright, reserving to himself the right of publication abroad, so as to entitle his assignee to perfect a copyright for this kingdom, by publishing here before any publication abroad. This case was followed in Bentley v. Foster, (10 Sim. 329).

In Clementi v. Walker, (2 B. & A. 861), the work in question was published in France on the 17th June, 1814. In the next month the author came to England, and by parol assigned the copyright for England for a valuable consideration to the plaintiffs, who published in September, but did not procure an assignment in writing until 1822, the copy complained of having been sold in 1818. It was held that the parol assignment being invalid by the English law, (Power v. Walker, 1 Camp. 9), the publication in September, 1814, could not be considered as a publication by or on account of the assigns of the author or the author himself. And Bayley, J., in delivering judgment, after advertising to the 12 Geo. 2, c. 36, and 41 Geo. 3, c. 107, s. 7, said, "Upon this view of the several statutes, it appears to me, that the Legislature contemplates publications here, and here only, and that they contemplate such publications only where they are capable of advancing literature here, viz. before the work is published here by a person who has obtained it fairly and bona fide under a previous publication by the author in a foreign country." "The case is reduced to this, whether an author who first publishes abroad, and instead of using due diligence to publish here, forbears to publish until some other person fairly and without blame publishes here, and insists on his privilege, and at a distance of time to a publication which has taken place here, and treat the continuance of that publication as piracy, and we are of opinion that he cannot. Whether the act of printing and publishing abroad makes the work at once publici juris, it is not necessary now to decide, but we have no doubt that it becomes publici juris if the author does not take prompt measures to publish here." "The positive enactment of the International Copyright Act seems to have reduced the inquiry in cases of this sort to a simple question of time, without reference to the fact or possibility of any intermediate publication here by a third person.

In Guichard v. Mori, (9 Law Journ., N. S., Ch., 227), there was also considerable delay in publishing here after publication abroad, and the plaintiff failed, although the first publication here was made by him.

In Chappell v. Purday, (4 You. & C. 435), the circumstances were substantially the same as those in Clementi v. Walker, and the Court refused to interfere by injunction. The title to the work there in question was afterwards tried by action, (Chappell v. Purday, 14 Mee. & W. 303, better reported 9 Jur. 495), and it was held that there was no copyright. Pollock, C. B., said, "The result seems to be, that if a foreign author, not having published abroad, first publishes in England, he may have the benefit of the statutes; but that no case has decided, that, if the author first published abroad, he can afterwards have the benefit of it by first publishing here." "Upon the whole, then, we think it doubtful whether a foreigner, not resident here, can have an English copyright; and we think he certainly cannot if he has first published his work abroad before any publication in England." In that case, a prior publication abroad by the author's assignee there, being by one who had a lawful right of publishing, was held sufficient to defeat the British copyright. It is to be inferred that a wrongful publication abroad would not have that effect.

In Cocks v. Purday, (C. P., May 12, 1848), a foreign author, resident abroad, assigned his work to H., also resident abroad, who assigned the copyright for England, which assignments were sufficient, according to the lex loci, to pass a copyright. These assignments were made after the passing of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45. The jury found that the publication took place simultaneously in England and abroad. The Court held that the plaintiff was entitled, on the ground that it was clear, upon authority as well as principle, that a first publication here was sufficient to confer a copyright, and that there was nothing in a contemporaneous publication abroad to defeat such right. To defeat an English copyright, a prior publication abroad must be proved. The Court also held, that the assignments, being valid by the law of the country where they were made, were sufficient to make the plaintiff an "assign" within the meaning of the 3rd section of the act.

The effect of the 17th section of the stat. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 65, does not appear to have been considered in the above case; but it is probable that the decision will be sustained. If, as is the case in America, the laws of the principal continental states do not render first publication essential to the acquisition of a copyright, the point is not of much importance.

In a recent case at Nisi Prius, (Boosey v. Purday, 28th June, 1848*), Pollock, C. B., ruled, that a fraction of a day was not to be disregarded in determining the question of priority, so that a publication at Milan at 9 A.M. was sufficient to prevent a copyright in the same work being acquired by a publication in London, which the witnesses said commenced by an exposure for sale at 11 or 12. Copies were received by the publisher from the printer on the preceding day.

We think this a needlessly harsh decision. The nature of the subject and the usage of the trade were not sufficiently considered: a book is said to be published on a certain day, but not at a certain hour of that day; and it is published on that day if it is at the publisher's shop ready to be sold to those coming to inquire for it. It is usually announced for publication before the day has arrived; and if it is actually ready on the day, it is published on the day, although not a copy may be sold or shewn to any one. It is, therefore, impossible to fix the moment or hour of publication. Putting a copy into the shop window, or entering the work at Stationers' Hall, on which some stress was laid, is certainly not essential to publication.

In the same case a question arose as to the evidence of title. The stat. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 65, provides (sect. 7) that a book of registry shall be kept at Stationers' Hall, wherein may be registered the proprietorship in the copyright of books, &c., and assignments thereof, and that an official copy of any entry in such registry "shall be prima facie proof of the proprietorship or assignment of copyright or license as therein expressed," but subject to be rebutted by other evidence. Persons wilfully making false entries are punishable, and a remedy is given to persons aggrieved by any entry. The 13th section provides for the registry of proprietorship of copyrights existing when the act passed. The entry is to be made on the ex parte application of the person claiming the copyright, and when made it is to be prima facie evidence of his title, subject to be rebutted. Now, when the author's name is on the title-page, and he is the proprietor, such an entry is superfluous, and, therefore, an entry of proprietorship by some one claiming as assignee must have been intended. If a person who has no title procures himself to be registered as proprietor, how is his prima facie title under the registry to be rebutted? It is evidence of his title at the date of the entry. It cannot, therefore, be rebutted by shewing, that, at some time prior to the entry, some other person was entitled, for non constat that his title has not determined; and in the case supposed there must necessarily have been a time when some other person, namely, the author, was entitled. The prima facie case made by the entry can, therefore, only be rebutted by proof of a subsequent alienation by the person registered as proprietor, or by proof that the alleged copyright never existed at all in any person, (as by shewing a prior publication abroad), or that it has determined. If another person is entitled to the copyright, his only remedy is to apply to the court or a judge for an order to expunge the entry under sect. 14, which will be granted, we presume, if the registered proprietor do not regularly prove his title. This provision, and that which makes the wilful procuring of a false entry a misdemeanor, are quite sufficient to prevent any ill use being made of the enactment, which thus, in a very efficient and unobjectionable manner, relieves the plaintiff from the trouble and expense of proving his proprietorship in all cases where that fact is not in dispute. We are, therefore, at a loss to understand why the Chief Baron should, on the trial of Boosey v. Purday, have treated the enactment as so unreasonable and absurd as to be incapable of operation; so that the plaintiff was driven to prove every step by which the copyright passed from the author to him.

COLLYER'S LAW OF PARTNERSHIP.

Second Edition, greatly enlarged.

A PRACTICAL TREATISE ON THE LAW OF PARTNERSHIP, (including Partnerships in Mines, Joint-Stock Companies, and Ships), with an Appendix of Forms. By JOHN COLLYER, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister at Law.

In Six very thick octavo Volumes, price 64. 10s. in strong cloth bds., BURN'S JUSTICE OF THE PEACE AND PARISH OFFICER. The Twenty-ninth Edition, corrected and greatly enlarged, containing the Statutes and Cases to 7 & 8 Vict., inclusive, with a New Collection of Precedents. The Title "Poor" by Mr. Commissioner BERE, of the Exeter District Court of Bankruptcy; the rest of the Work by THOMAS CHITTY, Esq., of the Inner Temple.

On introducing a new and greatly improved edition of an old-established book, like "Burn's Justice," to the notice of the Members of the Magistracy and the Legal Profession, the Publishers need only point attention to the claims which it has upon two such large and influential bodies, to ensure a success similar to that which has attended all previous editions. Since the year 1837 (the date of the last edition) a considerable number of important Statutes have been passed; by several of those Statutes the executive power of the Magistrate has been somewhat restricted, and by others extended, while the whole duties of the office have undergone too many changes not to render a New Edition (symbolizing every Act and decision to the present time) a valuable and necessary addition to the Libraries of Gentlemen engaged in the Local Administration of Justice. The Six Volumes have received a thorough revision; the Forms have been re-modelled, and carefully adapted to the recent changes; several new Titles (created by modern enactments) have been introduced, and great exertions have been made to ensure a correct and full development of the Law as it now stands. The title "Poor," which occupies the whole of the Fourth Volume, has again been prepared by Mr. Commissioner BERE; and his object has been to furnish the cases at full length, being satisfied that no compendious abstract, however carefully made, would supply a satisfactory Manual for those who attend the Quarter Sessions. The Marginal Notes and the Index are, however, abridgments of the Cases, so that the general principles of the Law may be ascertained without reading the fuller statement. The great utility of the Work as an authority, presenting the cases in detail, and superseding the Reports themselves, is thereby preserved, at the same time that the necessity of reading the whole is obviated by the fulness of the Marginal Notes.

MR. STEWART'S PROPOSAL FOR INSURING TITLES.

We have ourselves long entertained an idea relating to the means of assuring titles to land, which we have never hitherto committed to the pages of THE JURIST, because we do not consider it fitting for THE JURIST to indulge in investigations which may be thought by the Profession merely speculative. But we find that others as well as ourselves have entertained the idea, and have canvassed it, and put it fairly before the public; and conceiving still that it is one deserving of very serious consideration, we think the time has now arrived when in the pages of this Journal, we may properly call to it the attention of the Profession. The notion to which we allude is, that of applying the principle of ordinary insurance to titles; and it has been very recently ably explained and urged by Mr. Stewart in his Lectures on the Means of facilitating the Transfer of Land*. As Mr. Stewart is the first who has had the courage publicly to broach this idea, and is, therefore, the person best entitled to the credit of its usefulness should it hereafter be adopted, we think we cannot do better than let him speak for himself in explanation of it, before we proceed to make our own comments.

After arguing in favour of a general registry, Mr. Stewart proceeds thus:—"Is it possible, then, that the benefit of the register can be realised immediately without these disadvantages? Can any means be devised by which a living person, wishing to buy land, can be satisfied with the investigation which he there may make, without raking up the old title?—for that is the point to arrive at. If not, many existing owners, I fear, will look but coldly on any plan of registry, the benefit of which is almost entirely prospective, and intended chiefly for the good of others. The doubts surrounding the question, the fears of disclosure, will press on them, and they will view, at all events, with no great desire, a scheme in which no immediate benefit is offered to themselves. And yet I need not tell you, that it is by the existing owners of property that any registry act must be passed. Can we then satisfy this all-important class, that they may derive immediate benefit from the register, and that it will greatly facilitate the transfer not only of the property of their successors, but of their own?

"I think it possible to secure this great advantage, by a method which will enable the existing owners of property to deal with their lands without this constant retrospective deduction of title which we have found to be so tedious and expensive—which will be attended with, at least, all the safety of the present system, and be much more speedy and cheap.

"I have already told you that the reiterated investigation of the title usually required by the present practice is the great cause of that expense and delay and risk. Now, it certainly would be of immense advantage if, in connexion with a registry of the land, there were one complete and final examination of the title, which should answer once for all, and not be attended with the disadvantages I have alluded to. Mark on what security we now buy land, and lend our money on land. It is lent wholly on the faith of the counsel's opinion that 'the title is a good one;' and the correctness of this opinion is found very rarely to be disproved by the result. At all events, this is the only security ever taken. Suppose, then, that after a certain time, and preparatory to being placed on the register, the title of the lands in which a dealing was intended to be made, was inspected by eminent counsel selected for the purpose, and that this examination was to be a final one, preparatory to being placed on the register. This would be something. The purchaser would be informed that the examination had taken place, and that the title had been declared a good one by Mr. B. or Mr. C. Now, if this had just occurred, it might very probably satisfy a purchaser under the existing system. It would, therefore, be not too much to expect that the same examination would satisfy a purchaser under any new system. But we must make sure. Now what is the proportion of good to bad titles in this country at the present time? I have heard it stated, by experienced professional men, that for ninety-nine good titles there is only one bad. And as to this, I find a very important passage in Sir Edward Sugden's Book on Vendors, who says in the last edition, 'that the present expense as to titles is, in forty-nine cases out of fifty, superfluous; but as every one may be in danger, all are guarded against it. The precaution has very much increased within the last twenty years, but not from any increased danger.' (Edit. 11, p. 986). Well, then, according to this last very high authority, one title in fifty only is bad. Now, if this be so,—and I believe there can be no doubt that a larger proportion than forty-nine in fifty are good,—does not the principle of insurance apply? This principle, which is constantly receiving extension, and with great benefit, is founded on the fact that, in a certain number of lives, a certain number of deaths only will take place within a given time; or that in a certain number of houses only a certain number will be destroyed by fire; or that in a certain number of ships only a certain number will be lost; and on these calculations some of the most profitable, easily conducted, and wealthy companies and businesses in the world have been established. Now, let us see whether it be not possible to extend the principle to the insurance of titles. Each of these different kinds of insurance had its battle to fight at the commencement, and do not let us reject this extension of the principle without careful inquiry. I wish, in the whole of the procedure that I propose, as much as possible to abide by the present practice of conveyancing, and to act according to existing rules. I will assume, then, that one of our large insurance offices, in whose means and stability the public would have perfect confidence, (and no other could do it at all), was willing to undertake assurances of this nature. Let us see what would be done. One source of the profits of these companies, as we all know, is lending out their money on mortgage. They have, therefore, a machinery for examining titles; that is, they take care to employ an able and experienced solicitor and conveyancer. Now, it is on the opinion of both these gentlemen that the company lend their money—they have no other safeguard. They advance their own money on the sole faith of this opinion; and sometimes very large sums indeed, on one title, 100,000*l.*, 200,000*l.*, and even, in a late case that came to my knowledge, 400,000*l.* on the title of one person. Now, if they would lend their own money on such a security, it is most obvious that they could guarantee the payment of another person's money on a similar certificate by the professional adviser that the title was a good one. If they lent their money on a title that turned out bad, they would assuredly lose it; and if it was another person's money they could be no worse off, and might possibly be better. All these titles, then, that are good, are susceptible of being insured, with only a sufficient protection, by way of premium, (to be paid as I shall hereafter explain), against some one title in fifty, or, as I think, a larger proportion, which might, in spite of every care, turn out bad alike under the present law as under the new system. So far, you will see that we have adhered to the existing practice; and there is no shock done to any favour, or, if you please, prejudice towards existing habits. But see what an advantage is gained. The person whose title has thus been approved goes with it to the register. The title is thus insured for what the land will fetch in the market. No further examination of title is necessary: it is an insured title down to the 1st of January, 1848; and were a register in existence, it is a registered title ever afterwards. If it remains a sufficient time on the register, it becomes a title against all the world, and the insurance is at an end; if, on the other hand, the purchaser has got the unlucky fiftieth title, the black sheep, and he is turned out, at all events he gets back the money that he paid.

* On the Means of Facilitating the Transfer of Land. In three Lectures. By James Stewart, of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister.

"But we have so far supposed that the title was of that class on which insurance societies lend their money—that is to say, marketable titles. Let us suppose that the title, when examined, turned out not a marketable title, but only what is called a good holding title. Might it be also insured? Undoubtedly; because, if the purchaser, although he had not what is technically called a marketable title, was not evicted, the company would be quite safe, although here, perhaps, a higher premium might be required. Here, then, are two classes of titles, under which the great bulk of the present titles may be ranged,—marketable titles and holding titles, and for this purpose you would thus get rid of the absurd distinction. What is to be done with a third-class title more or less defective? What is done now when there is a willing purchaser? An indemnity is given against the defect according to the nature of the defect. A bond or covenant, or charge on other land, or deposit of money. Thus the defective title is now cured. Cannot a company, acting in discharge of its proper duty, take an indemnity as well as an individual? I have thus provided for all these three usual classes of titles. And what is to be done with positively bad titles—can they be insured? Why, no; no more than the life of a man in a galloping consumption. They ought not to be transformed, and, as to them, the holder has no title, and ought not to be protected. But all technical blots—all that class of objections which are called 'conveyancer's crotchets,' and most of these objections which private acts of Parliament are obtained to cure, could be insured against with perfect safety: there would be an end to them for ever. If this were done, do you not see what a mass of technical objections which now effectually prevent the transfer of land would be got rid of? An insured title down to a certain period, and a registered title ever afterwards, would give you indeed free trade in land, if this is what is desired, and would, at all events, allow the real owner to do what he wanted with it.

"Let us inquire, therefore, a little more in detail into

he practicability of the plan. Three objects must be attended to:—the perfect solvency of the office; the reasonable profit of the office; and the regulation as to the payment of a sufficient premium, but no more.

"1. The solvency of the office. Now as to this, if we were in a foreign country, I should propose that, to secure this great national object, the government should take this responsibility; nor would it, as I am informed, be the first time that a free and important commercial state has taken a similar responsibility. I believe, that in the Free City of Hamburg,—a city closely connected with this country,—the duty of insurance of titles is sanctioned by that state, and any citizen may borrow money on his house to the extent of one half of its value, by a very simple process. The registered owner has merely to apply to the proper office, and, without any of the expense and trouble attending our mortgage system here, he obtains the money that he wants from any person willing to lend it, and to this extent its repayment is insured. I need not say that this is no small convenience to the citizens of a large trading town; nor can I see why Hamburg is to have it and not London, Liverpool, and Manchester; and I think we have a fair right to ask government for assistance, if we cannot otherwise get it done.

"But in this country we are not in the habit of applying to the government on these occasions. We do things for ourselves if we want them. Thus it is to individual enterprise calling into existence combined action, that we owe so many great undertakings, of which I need not remind you. It is, indeed, to the large existing companies that I, in the first place, look for aid in this matter; and if they will pay unprejudiced attention to it, I am induced to believe that this extension of the principle of insurance may safely and properly be made by them. There are some facts which may guide them in forming a conclusion as to it. They have themselves, according to their usual practice, lent large sums of money on mortgage on no other security than that which I have mentioned to you,—the opinion of counsel that they might safely do so. How often have they lost their money so lent? I apprehend very rarely. They may have no more money to lend in this way, but, under proper guards, might they not greatly add to their profits, by insuring the money of others, which is always seeking investment by way of mortgage or on the sale of land, and taking the same precaution they now do? Again, these great undertakings, the railways (a splendid illustration of the magnitude of success of individual enterprise in this country) have now dealt with almost all the titles in this country. These companies are satisfied with what is called a holding title, and they have great facilities granted to them as to completing a title; for if there is any unnecessary delay in this respect, they may pay the purchase money into the bank, and this will give the company a complete title against the persons into whose names they pay it, at not, of course, further than this. If there are other persons entitled, then they may appear, and demand to be satisfied. Now, railways have been established about twenty years in this country, and have lately increased along the length and breadth of the land, and thus dealt with nine-tenths of the whole titles of the country.

How often has any railway company received any demand of this nature? This will go far to prove to you, as I said in my first lecture, that the bulk of our titles are good,—that is, good to hold, but technically bad and unmarketable, and not capable of transfer; but, according to the plan which I propose, this distinction would be at an end, because there would be no second examination of the title, and the only contingency on which the money insured could be recovered, would be the eviction,—the turning out of the person whose title was insured. Take also our list of causes at Westminster and on the circuits; how often does it happen that an ejectment is brought to turn out a man who has bought his land? Sometimes, undoubtedly, but very rarely. These are all great classes of facts; and if you want more, take the opinion of experienced solicitors in town and country, and they will tell you that the great mass of titles are good, although often unmarketable; and in spite of this, we have the practical absurdity that they cannot be transferred without all this expense, delay, and insecurity. Now, all this convinces me that you may, when the subject is canvassed and understood, find persons and corporations of undoubted solvency to undertake this risk.

"2. Next, as to the reasonable profit of the office. This, which I have already partly touched on, must be secured, or you will not get the proper persons to undertake it; and, on the other hand, you must raise a sufficient fund to meet any loss that may take place. I think there will be no difficulty in satisfying you that a sufficient fund may easily be found. I propose to raise it in the following way; but I need hardly say, that if this plan were adopted, the details would most properly be left to the persons who undertook the risk. But the plan that I propose is as follows:—A person wishing to deal with his land would apply to the insurance company (assuming it to be established) to insure his title. His deeds would be examined in the way now done when a company lends money on mortgage. If the title was insured by the office, the deeds would be there deposited, and the owner would take a certificate to that effect to the register office, and the lands would be put on the register as being an insured title, thus constituting a root or foundation of the future title. The title, which would be thus insured, would be, in many cases,—first, a marketable title; but it might happen that the title was not a marketable title, but might be, secondly, a good holding title; or it might be, thirdly, a title more or less defective.

"Let it be next assumed that Sir Edward Sugden's opinion referred to is correct, and that one title only in fifty is bad. A fund of two per cent. would meet the loss which might arise; but it does not follow that it would actually happen; because the title, although really bad, might not be discovered to be so, or, if discovered, might not be proved to be bad. But in order to afford perfect security, it might be necessary to raise this fund. It is proposed then to raise it in this way: that marketable titles, as well as all others, should pay a small per-centage on the purchase or mortgage money, to be paid by the purchaser or mortgagee, in lieu of the expenses now incurred in the investigation of title. That the titles not marketable, but good holding titles, should pay a small further sum, to be paid by the vendor or mortgagor; that where a title has a positive defect or flaw, this should be insured against by a higher rate, to be paid by the vendor or mortgagor, or that the office should be protected by some special indemnity or deposit of the purchase or mortgage money.

MR. STEWART'S PROPOSAL FOR INSURING TITLES.

"This fund, then, would receive contributions for a certain period from every person who received benefit from the register. The purchaser would be exempted from all expense of inquiry into the title, and it is fair that he should pay something in this way. As the smaller purchaser would be most benefited, it is only fair he should pay most. These dealings are always, and should be, the most numerous, and this plan would, on all probability, greatly increase them. There would be payments also by the vendors, applicable to particular incumbrances, according to the state of the title. But, besides this, the fund would, in fact, rarely suffer. If the fiftieth title was bad, it does not follow that eviction would take place. Time would be constantly running, as against claimants. The Statutes of Limitations, and the doctrines as to presumption, would actually establish the title against all claims. But even if a claim were established, the fund would not necessarily suffer. If it appeared on the deeds, that the defect in the title had escaped the observations of the counsel employed, then the fund should pay; but if it arose on deeds or transactions suppressed by the vendor, or from any cause not included in the abstract, the person who received the money would have to pay in the first instance, and it would only be in the event of his failure in that, that the fund would actually suffer, although, as against the person losing the money, the fund must in the first instance pay.

"3. But there is a third point to be provided for. The premiums to be charged must not be too high. Now here I speak with more confidence, because these premiums, after the first examination is over, are to be in lieu of the present large expense connected with the sale of land, and I have, therefore, more especially in small purchases of land, a wide margin. I do not think it necessary to enter into details as to the exact sum which it would be necessary to raise; but we have seen that, according to Sir E. Sugden's opinion, as to the state of our titles, two per cent. would be the most that it would be necessary to raise. Now, I have already told you, that in many small purchases and mortgages the expenses amount to thirty, and even fifty per cent., and this is confirmed by the evidence taken before the Lords' Committee. Need I say how much this class of vendors and purchasers, mortgagors and mortgagees, would gain if this expense were reduced to two per cent., or even to three per cent. But if I am right in my supposition, that large profits may be made by a company undertaking this risk, I doubt not that here, as in other cases, to all those having dealings in the commodity of land, the most effectual protection would be found in competition.

"I have not proposed this plan rashly. I have myself given it the utmost consideration. I have stated it to many eminent professional men, conveyancers and others. I have also consulted actuaries and others, within and out of the profession, and I have never yet heard the principle on which it rests shaken, but always confirmed. I shall be glad to hear fair and candid objections to it, and it is for the purpose of further discussion that I have thus ventured to bring it under public notice. The details would, no doubt, require a careful settlement; and the same difficulty which, in their infancy, beset the established systems of insurance, would be felt, and must be provided for in this by a wide margin. But this principle affords a means, and, I believe, the only effectual means, except some compulsory law as to the examination of titles, which would violate the rights of property, and be alien to our habits and practice; by which the landowners can disentangle themselves from their present enormous difficulties. This plan which I propose would be in accordance with all our established practice; and would gradually, but surely, confirm and settle every title in the country, and give immediately a cheap and a ready mode of dealing with land.

"I have now laid before you the rough outline of the plan. Do not imagine that I suppose that it would be free from difficulties or from fraud. I can only say, that, in my opinion, it would be infinitely more free from these than the present system; and that it would enable persons freely to deal with land, and that by its means we might obtain those advantages which I alluded to in my first lecture:—First, security of tenure; secondly, facility of transfer; thirdly, certainty in point of time in all our arrangements respecting land; and, fourthly, a reasonable, moderate, and well-ascertained scale of expense attending our various dealings respecting it. These are what are wanted by the landowner; yes, and by the lawyer, too; for I have shewn you that many members of the Profession are calling for these, as necessary for carrying on their business. The plan, as I believe, would, first, relieve the seller of land from his present difficulty and danger; secondly, it would secure to the purchaser a safe title, at a small expense, and in a speedy manner; and, thirdly, it would provide an indemnity fund for persons who might be insured, by any improper dealing, under the new system.

"Before I conclude the present lecture, I wish it to be understood, that, in proposing this great change, I do not hold out any hope of dispensing with the use of the lawyer in dealings with land. When the interest of the Profession clashes with that of the public, it is the duty of the former to give way; but here I believe they do not clash; and it is as much the interest of the Profession as of the public to promote the ready transfer of real property. I find this expressed on all sides by members of the Profession, and more especially by solicitors, from many of whom I have received great assistance. I find in those countries in which registries are established on the principle for which I contend, that the professional classes who assist in dealings with land, are rich, powerful, and respected. Without legal assistance I do not believe that dealings in land can be safely conducted. I have no intention, because I think I have no power, of dispensing with this assistance. But I conceive that the charges may be made more moderate in each particular case, and better defined and regulated according to the amount of property. And believing, as I do, that if you establish a register on this plan, there would be twenty dealings where there is now one, I am satisfied that the last person who would complain of this alteration would be the lawyer. It is not his real interest, be assured, to support a system which scares the great majority of the public from having anything to do with the purchase of land."

Such is Mr. Stewart's explanation of the plan proposed by him. The idea of a title-insurance office will, no doubt, appear to many at first sight singular, but a little reflection will shew that it is not in any degree more singular than that of a life-insurance office. The principle of insurance is simple enough. It is this:

that the average of uncertainties may, in general, be measured, though the individual uncertainty cannot. Thus, for instance, though it is impossible to calculate how long a particular life will last, it is quite possible to calculate with a degree of precision inferior only to mathematical certainty, what will be the average duration of life in a body of a certain numerical extent. So, although it would be quite impossible to calculate what number of dry or of wet days there will be in any one year, it would be quite possible, if sufficient observations on the past were collected, to calculate how many there will be in a century or some other term of sufficient duration. It would seem, in fact, that events are only uncertain in their individual and separate character; but that all events of every known kind are certain to happen some given number of times, in reference to a given period, and a given number of objects of those events; that although, for instance, it is uncertain whether any individual person will live to a given age, it is certain, or almost certain, that the sum of the several ages at which any 10,000 people living in the same locality will die, will be a uniform quantity.

Now, what is there in the uncertainty attaching to titles which should exclude it from the application of this doctrine? A title to land never can be said to be perfectly certain. With all the care and skill that may be applied to its investigation, of course by reason of error or of concealment of facts, it may be subject to some unseen defect. The chances of defect will, of course, be in general in the inverse ratio to the amount of skill and care bestowed upon it. But the element of uncertainty in the detection of the defect at all, and in its detection, if at all, by the right person, comes in aid of its security; and various other questions affect it, which would, of course, render any a priori calculations as to the average of loss of estates by bad titles, impossible. But, as in all such cases, an approximation to the average may be obtained by a mixed process of observation and calculation, so that, with the aid of statistical investigation, and calculations founded thereon, it would be as easy to say what premium will cover the risk of assuring a title of any given kind, as it is to say what premium will cover the risk of fire or of life. It will be objected, doubtless, that the tables of insurance would be complicated, requiring to be varied according to a variety of circumstances; that the premiums that would cover the insurance of an estate that has been mortgaged and sold over and over again, and has been for generations before every conveyancer of eminence, would be different from that which would be required for a family estate continuing in the same family for generations; that a title in which there had been many entails could not be insured in the same way as one continuously in fee; that when you come to titles having apparent defects, such defects are of kinds so various, that the scale of premiums would be infinitely complicated. But conceding, that if, in reference to every species of defect, it were attempted to calculate the precise value of the contingency, and to apply an amount of premium perfectly proportionate to the contingency, the office would be impracticable, it is answered, that no such minute accuracy need be attempted in reference to this, any more than it ever is attempted in reference to any ner species of insurance. All that is attempted in insurance, and all that need be attempted in title insurance, is to obtain an estimate of the mean of the various contingencies affecting titles of the same class, apprehending in each class different degrees of danger, as in life insurance the mean risk of life is taken, reference to what is generally termed a healthy life, though it is well known that there never are any two on a precise equality in point of health.

The objection, if any such be attempted, that such a step would destroy the occupation of the Profession, scarcely deserving of a moment's notice. In the first place, the thing to be considered is, not the occupation the legal Profession, but the improvement of the security and marketability of titles; and if that can only be obtained by the sacrifice of the Profession, why then the Profession had better wrap its robe around it and decently, for die it must. But, in the second place, is pure assumption to say that any such changes would really injure the Profession. That it would, after a first general investigation of titles, materially diminish the business of preparing and investigating abstracts we doubt not; but if it took effect by way of increasing the security and marketability of titles, in exactly the same ratio, or, perhaps, in a higher ratio, would increase the business of buying and selling estates, and all the professional business consequent thereon. Much more might be said upon the subject, but now leave it in the hands of our readers, hoping and believing that it will not be allowed to drop, and that some form and to some extent insurance of titles will be added to the business of insurance offices.

The Title "Poor" by Mr. Commissioner BERE, of the 2deter District Court of Bankruptcy; the rest of the Work by THOMAS HITT, Esq., of the Inner Temple.

On introducing a new and greatly improved edition of an old-established book, like "Burn's Justice," to the notice of the Members of the Magistracy and the Legal Profession, the Publishers need only point attention to the claims which it has upon two such large and influential bodies, to ensure a success similar to that which has attended all previous editions. Since the year 1837 (the date of the last edition) a considerable number of important Statutes have been passed; by several of those statutes the executive power of the Magistrate has been somewhat restricted, and by others extended, while the whole duties of the office are undergone so many changes not to render a New Edition (embodying every Act and decision to the present time) a valuable and necessary addition to the Libraries of Gentlemen engaged in the Local Administration of Justice. The Six Volumes have received a thorough revision; the Forms have been re-modelled, and carefully adapted to the recent changes; several new Titles (created by modern enactments) have been introduced, and great exertions have been made to ensure a correct and full development of the Law as it now stands. The Title "Poor," which occupies the whole of the Fourth Volume, has again been prepared by Mr. Commissioner BERE; and his object has been to furnish the user at full length, being satisfied that no compendious abstract, however carefully made, would supply a satisfactory Manual for those who attend the Quarter Sessions. The Marginal Notes and the Index are, however, abridgments of the Cases, so that the general principles of the law may be ascertained without reading the fuller statement. The real utility of the Work as an authority, presenting the cases in detail, and expounding the Reports themselves, is thereby preserved, at the same time that the necessity of reading the whole is obviated by the fullness of the Marginal Note.

LAW BOOKS recently published by S. SWEET, 1, Chancery-lane; and V. and R. STEVENS & G. S. MORTON, Bell-yard, Lincoln's-inn, and 194, Fleet-street.

In 1 thick vol., 12mo., price 15s. boards.

A SUMMARY of the LAW of MODERN PLEADING, incident to the Rules of Hilary Term, 1834; with such of the Decisions on Practice, Evidence, and Costs, as are closely connected with that subject. Also, copious Analysis of the Cases and Pleadings. By ROBERTS PHILIP TYRWHITT, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"The reports of the 'Common-law Commissioners' suggested extensive changes in the practice on this important subject, (Pleading), which changes, whether improvements or not, were sanctioned by Parliament, and embodied by all the common-law courts in general rules, dated Hilary Term, 1834. It was then sought to adapt old principles to modern exigencies, and to link the present with the past by regulating the transition—with what success the work before us attempts to develop. It embodies in its text the path of the decisions on 'Modern Pleading,' as incident to the above 'rules,' and condenses in the notes other valuable matter at present spread over lengthy 'reports.' The latter feature is adapted to render the volume more extensively useful in courts of Nisi Prius, particularly on the circuit, and in the library of country practitioners. Nor is it rigorously limited to its chief object; but includes the course of decisions on the replication de injuria in its extended application, as well as on the modern acts respecting land, tithes, mines, commons, ways, and easements, together with so much of the law of amendment, evidence, and costs as elucidates the new rules of pleading. On the whole, this work appears to have been prepared with much care and industry, and will be found to afford in small comparative compass a useful adjunct to the works of Stephen and Chitty."—Times, Oct. 29th, 1846.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"There is something eminently practical in the general aspect of the book; it is small, compact of print and law, and clearly arranged and set forth."—The Jurist.

"No turf-man, betting-man, horse-dealer, stable-keeper, or in fact any other description of horseman will be able to get on in his business without this book."—The Veterinarian.

"This a most useful book, edited by Mr. G. H. H. Oliphant, a Barrister, and embraces every matter in which the Horse is concerned. Every question is treated of with clearness and accuracy, and the law as it exists is explained and demonstrated by recent decisions in the Courts of Law. The question respecting Derby Clubs and their legality forms a prominent portion of the work, and we unfeignedly recommend its possession to all interested in the numerous subjects on which it treats."—Bel's Life.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 2, 1848.

As several points have been determined under the Trustees' Relief Act, 10 & 11 Vict. c. 96, we have thought that it may be convenient to our readers to have them collected. We pass over those affecting the question, whether a trustee should be served with a petition presented by cestuis que trustent under the act, as that point is now settled by the General Order of the 10th June, 1848, rule 5. (See 12 Jur. 241). In Ex parte Fletcher, re Fletcher, (12 Jur. 619), a question arose out of what fund the costs of the petition should be paid. The principal fund had been paid in under the act, by the trustees, and the tenant for life presented her petition to have the dividends paid to her for life, first paying the costs out of the capital. The case occurred before the General Order of 10th June, and when the balance of authority was in favour of not serving the trustees, and neither the trustees, nor the persons entitled in remainder, were before the Court. The Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce refused, under these circumstances, to allow any portion of the capital belonging to third parties, after the petitioner's death, to be applied to the payment of costs. The circumstances of this case cannot of course occur again, as the trustees must now (by the Order of 10th June) be served with notice of such an application by a tenant for life; but the principle of the decision seems applicable as well to future cases, on the subject of giving costs out of the corpus of the fund. For, if the Vice-Chancellor would have so given the costs, on the trustees; or the remaindermen appearing and opposing, he would of course have given them in their absence. He appears, therefore, to have decided that the costs of an application by a tenant for life will not be given out of the fund unless the remaindermen consent.

In Ex parte Peart (12 Jur. 620) the same point was determined by Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce in the same way. That case also occurred before the order of the 10th June, and the remaindermen were not served. It is not stated whether the trustees were; but it is presumed they were not.

But where a petition was presented by some of several legatees to whom a legacy was given, for payment of their share, and the usual inquiries were requisite, the Vice-Chancellor of England doubted whether the estate of the testator ought not to bear the costs. "It was a question," he said, "whether the petitioners ought to bear the costs of these inquiries. The object of the act was merely to release trustees; and it never was the intention of the Legislature to make cestuis que trustent pay costs, which, before the act, would have been borne by the estate of the testator." (Re Sharpe, 12 Jur. 492). Ultimately an order for the usual inquiries was made, but the question of costs was not determined.

In Re Parry (6 Hare, 306) a question arose as to what persons are competent under the act to transfer funds into Court. The words of the act are, that "trustees or other persons having any annuities standing in their names in the books, &c., or any government or parliamentary securities standing in their names, or in the names of any deceased persons of whom they shall be personal representatives upon any trusts whatever, or the major part of them, shall be at liberty," &c.

The question was, whether two surviving trustees out of four could pay the fund into court. It was suggested that they were neither trustees nor executors of a trustee; that the court held the case within the act. We confess that we should have been greatly surprised at any other decision; for the survivors of several trustees are clearly trustees; thus far, that all the estate, interest, right, and powers of the original trustees, vest in them by force of the very terms of the gift to them. By trustees the act must have meant actual trustees. By personal representatives of a deceased trustee, it must of course have meant personal representatives in whom, as such, the trust estate has vested.

In Ex parte Wood, (15 Sim. 469), the application was by the widow of a person entitled absolutely to the fund in default of issue of the marriage. The petition alleged a bequest by the husband to the petitioner, and that there was no issue of the marriage; and this, the material fact, was verified by affidavit. But the Court refused to make the order on affidavit, and required a reference to the Master to ascertain the fact that there was no issue.

We have in a previous commentary on the 10 & 11 Vict. c. 96, observed, that it has been long ago determined that the Court will, under that act, adjudicate on a contested construction of an instrument creating a trust. It is quite certain that such is the practice; but at the same time it is not to be concluded that the Court will in every such case adjudicate. Probably, since the Order of 10th June, 1848, all parties materially interested being necessarily before the Court, many cases will be dealt with on petition, which, before that Order, would have been required to be made the subject of a bill.

Observations on the Offices of the Masters in Chancery, &c. [Stevens & Norton, 1848.]

The pamphlet above referred to deserves the serious perusal of every one who takes interest in Chancery reforms. It proceeds from the pen of one of the most experienced Masters of the Court of Chancery; and in the quiet unassuming style in which its suggestions and arguments are couched, those who have had the advantage of conducting their Master's Office business before him, will recognise the manner of the lawyer and the gentleman, whom they have seen patiently listening, and quietly, yet firmly deciding, in one of the most shady of the many shady recesses of Southampton Buildings*. The principal object of Master Farrer's pamphlet is to consider some of the grounds of complaint that have been made against the Master's Offices, and some of the specific remedies that have been proposed. As might be expected, the author disapproves of many of the objections and proposed remedies. But, as might not be expected, he does concur in attributing some defects to the system, and he does approve of some and rather material alterations. Before proceeding to discuss the general subjects of the pamphlet, we will, however, quote, from Master Farrer, his exceedingly lucid statement of the duties of the Master, as the clear perception of what the Master is and has to do, is quite essential to the inquiry how far he and his functions ought to be meddled with.

"Before," he says, "the chief duties of the Masters are noticed, it may be useful to give a general classification of the causes heard before the superior courts; they may be arranged under three heads.

"1st. Causes in which the pleadings and evidence bring the subject in litigation so fully before the Court, that it is able to pronounce a perfect decree

'at the hearing and dispose of the whole subject of litigation, so as to make an end of the suit.

"2nd. Causes in which either the evidence does not satisfy the mind of the judge, who thinks further inquiry justifiable and necessary, or questions are raised by the answers, (there being no evidence), upon which inquiries at the request of the counsel are consented to by the Court, or the Court itself views the cause as one in which it cannot make a decree full and satisfactory to itself without inquiries being directed. In such causes decrees are made consisting of directions to the Master to make inquiries, sometimes very numerous and special; the object is to ascertain facts; but, in order to ascertain facts, questions of law must be decided by the Master, to whom, indeed, they are sometimes expressly referred.

"3rd. Causes instituted by creditors, legatees, next of kin, partners, executors, or trustees, &c.: these are generally called short causes, that is, the minutes are agreed upon, and, without argument before the Court, decrees are made containing orders and directions to the Master.

"In both these second and third classes of causes generally, and always in the third, the real litigation commences in the Master's Office, and that not between the parties in the cause only, but by the terms and effect of the decree, between other persons, not parties, who are invited to come into the Master's Office and establish their claims. In this way a cause which, before the decree is confined to A. and B., plaintiffs, &c. C. and D., defendants, expands itself into a variety of branches or subordinate suits, which, under the title of states of facts and counter states of facts, charges, claims, counter charges and claims respectively, are brought before the Master, and being supported by evidence, namely, deeds and other documents, depositions, affidavits, examination of witnesses, written interrogatories, or viva voce examination before the Master, are put into the form of a report to the Court.

"We now proceed to make a few observations upon the office and chief duties of a Master in Chancery.

"A Master in Chancery is an officer placed in very peculiar circumstances: called 'Master,' he is a judicial assistant to the Lord Chancellor and the other four superior judges; not called a judge, he decides and reports upon cases involving interests of unlimited amount, depending upon complicated facts and questions of nice and doubtful law.

"The accounts of trustees, executors, administrators, &c. are referred to the Master—items arise in many, if not most, of this class of references involving questions of law and fact which are decided by the Master. The creditors' and legatees' claims that are brought in under decrees for administering the estates of testators and intestates are often strongly contested. So, in passing the receiver's accounts, items are frequently brought before the Master. Again, he directs the production of deeds, books, and other documents.

"He has duties to perform which the superior judges of the Courts of Chancery never discharge; for instance, witnesses are examined, and cross-examined viva voce before him, sometimes by solicitors, sometimes by counsel of the common law, as well as of the Chancery bar; he has to decide questions of disputed evidence; written interrogatories for the examination of parties in the cause are settled by the Master.

"He is a quasi arbitrator or referee. When it is thought advisable to compromise a cause to which infants and married women are parties, and terms of compromise have been agreed upon by all parties competent to bind themselves, it is referred to the Master to report whether the compromise is fair and proper and for the benefit of the parties not sui juris, and whether the same, with any and what variations, should be adopted.

* Among other reforms in the Master's Office, surely a little increase of cheerfulness in the air and fitting up of their rooms might be attempted. The Masters are not in general young men, and the business transacted in their office is not of a particularly lively kind. Why should the rooms themselves be the darkest; the most dingy; the most cheerless and sepulchral looking vaults that can be contrived by the greatest possible abandonment of window light, of paint and whitewash, of furniture, and of everything having the slightest tendency to gladden the eye?

"It is referred to the Master to appoint receivers and consignees, and to fix the compensation to be made to them, by commission or per-centage on their receipts; to appoint trustees and guardians of infants, and to approve the allowance to be made for the maintenance and education of the latter; to inquire into the propriety of proposed marriages of the wards of the Court; to arrange the terms of settlements previous to their marriage; to arrange the terms of building, farm, and all other sorts of leases, trust and other deeds and instruments. Again, if issues are to be tried before a jury, or cases sent to a court of law, it is referred to the Master to settle them. Various other matters are in like manner referred to him to inquire into and report upon. All schemes for the regulation and management of schools, hospitals, and institutions coming under the definition of charitable uses, are settled by the Master.

"Where the superior court has a question of foreign law before it, the Master is ordered to inquire and report what that law is. If the parties differ upon the facts, the Master settles a case to be laid before foreign advocates for their opinion. If those advocates differ in opinion, the Master's duty is to decide between them and report to the Court. In suits between vendor and purchaser, the title is referred to the Master; objections taken to the title are decided by the Master.

"The Master hears and reports upon exceptions for insufficiency, scandal, and impertinence referred to him by the Court. He has also original jurisdiction to hear and decide on questions of insufficiency, scandal, and impertinence in examinations, affidavits, states of facts, &c., raised in proceedings before himself.

"He has original jurisdiction to hear applications for leave to amend bills, for time to answer, to enlarge publication, and to name commissioners.

"Another duty of the Masters is to examine persons committed to prison for contempt under the 1 Will. 4, c. 38, and report to the Lord Chancellor.

"It may, we believe, be said that there is no department of the law in which the work is so multifarious as in the Master's Office.

"The Master's decisions are all subject to appeal. There are three modes of appeal: first, by motion; second, by petition; third, by exceptions; each applicable to different proceedings. The last mode is generally applicable to reports. If a party wishes to appeal, he brings objections into the office to such parts of the report as he thinks erroneous. These objections are argued before the Master. If he allows them, the report is altered accordingly; if he overrules them, then the party turns the objections into exceptions to the report, and when the report is heard before the Court for further directions, the exceptions are argued. If the exceptions are overruled by the Court, the report is confirmed. The Court will not allow any questions to be raised upon the report other than those contained in the exceptions; if there are no exceptions,—in other words, no appeal,—then the Court confirms the Master's report as a matter of course, though thereby questions of the greatest importance are decided. Every act that the Master does in his office is in substance, if not in form, at least a quasi judicial act, the confirmation of his report by the Court being a mere form in practice, unless exceptions are taken to it. It is desirable, however, that the Court should retain this power of confirmation, because it might occasionally be necessary to order a report to be reviewed by the Master, though not expected to; as, for instance, if the Court should find in the report some clear mistake affecting the interests of persons not sui juris. The reports which require confirmation are those made in causes where further directions are reserved. Such reports and orders made by the Master as do not require confirmation, are final, unless appealed from by petition or motion."

The great evil attributed to the Master's Office, and that which Master Farrer first discusses is, the dilatoriness of the proceedings. This he attributes principally to the absence of any, or at least any sufficient, compulsory power in the Master to drive litigants on. It is difficult to collect whether the learned writer thinks the jurisdiction of equity would be benefited by giving to the Masters such power or not, although he clearly considers it as the only mode of remedying the defect, if it be proper to remedy the defect at all. We are somewhat ourselves inclined to think that the dilatoriness which arises from neglect in suitors, is not a defect with which the public has anything to do, and that there would be no gain in arming the Masters with power to push suitors on, whether they wish to move or not. If it could be shewn, that by reason of delay in any proceedings between A. and B. and C. and D. and as many others as choose to sleep over their suits, the Master was left without a sufficient supply of work, then it might be said that the public should interfere to prevent the time of a public officer from being deprived of its value; but there is no pretence for any such suggestion. There is always, as is well known, an abundant supply, even an abundant arrear of business in the Masters' Offices, and, while that is so, there is no better reason for giving to a Master power to compel litigants to prosecute a quarrel once commenced, than there would be for giving to any Court a power to compel parties to commence a quarrel. Litigation is but a species of warfare; and if the belligerents choose to pause in their career, of what possible concern can it be to any one else? That which is requisite is, to give to each party power to compel the other to go on with reasonable speed or to retire from the contest, and to give to the Court power to proceed when any party desires it, with the least possible waste of time. Beyond this the public should not interfere, or give power to judges to interfere.

That neither of these points is sufficiently attended to in the machinery of Master's-Office proceedings is perfectly plain; but the difficulty is, not to perceive, but how to remedy the defect. Master Farrer objects to one of the remedies that have been proposed, viz. that of the Master proceeding with his causes as the Court does, taking each in its turn and proceeding with it continuously until the whole matter capable of being considered and disposed of has been gone through. His objections to it are founded principally on the inconvenience to the Profession.

"If adopted," he says, "there would be five superior judges and ten Masters sitting with cause lists. The inconvenience and difficulty arising out of the sitting of so many judges and Masters at the same time would be very much increased by the Courts sitting at Westminster during the terms. It is feared, that business could not be practically carried on under such a system. As should render attendance in the Master's Office compulsory, without which it would be of little value. In a profession in which the attendance of the practitioners is required in so many places, it may with good reason be urged, that their convenience must be consulted, so far as to give them some power to choose their times of proceeding in some of those places; the defect in the present system is, not that they possess this power, but that they possess it without some control to prevent the abuse of it."

To this it may be answered, that the convenience of the Profession ought always to be secondary to the interest of the suitors, and that the Profession will practically always make it convenient to attend Courts in the way and at the times required by those Courts. Moreover, if the sittings of the Masters remaining as they are, the convenience of the Profession and the interest of the suitors are found incompatible, the proper course would seem to be, not to say the evil is irremediable.

diable, but to alter the sittings of the Masters, so that the Profession may not be required to attend in so many places at the same time, as, it is alleged, is now requisite. For ourselves, we should fearlessly recommend a trial of the system of a cause list, and taking and finishing in order the causes, or such matters therein as could be dealt with and disposed of. We are well satisfied, that, if the Masters went through their lists in that manner, parties would take care to have the assistance of proper professional advocates, and that in some manner the solicitors, and if counsel were required, the counsel, would contrive to make their appearance. The real truth is, as every one practising in Chancery knows, that, because the practice of the Masters is lax,—because they yield any extent of accommodation to solicitors, and still more to counsel, and because the postponement of a warrant causes no loss to any professional man, a warrant before the Master is treated as a thing to be attended, provided nothing intervenes; but the intervention of a very slight thing is sufficient.

The proposition which receives Master Farrer's unqualified approbation is, that which relates to making the states of facts, &c.—in fact, the pleadings—and the evidence, complete within a certain time, and not allowing any further evidence afterwards. On this the learned Master observes:—

“Whether these suggestions propose the best remedies for the evil intended to be removed, may be subject of consideration, but it is manifest that there must be some means devised to effect the object aimed at, namely, ‘the making of states of facts and evidence complete.’ We submit, by way of illustration of our meaning, that on a litigated state of facts the Master might direct a warrant to issue to shew cause why he should not proceed without further evidence, or why he should not allow or disallow a state of facts. If no cause were shewn, then the Master should proceed, and no further evidence ought to be received or amendment of state of facts made without leave of the Court, as is the case, according to the present practice, after the warrant to prepare the report has issued, when no further evidence can be received or claims left without leave of the Court. Such a shew-cause warrant ought to be issuable only by leave of the Master, to prevent the growth of a practice of issuing warrants of this nature on all occasions, which, in many cases, would lead to useless expense by needlessly multiplying warrants.”

In the propriety of some alteration of this kind we fully concur, and doubt not that if the pleadings in the Master's Office were conducted with more strictness, a great source of delay and inconvenience would be removed. The truth is, that the evils of the Master's Office are not inherent in the system, and do not require for their correction a sweeping abolition of the whole existing machinery. They are evils of detail, arising out of the principle of laxity and excessive indulgence pervading every proceeding in the Master's Office. States of facts are prepared with very little care, because they are allowed to be amended almost without limit. It is difficult to say when a hearing will be conclusive, because evidence is allowed to be brought in, as Master Farrer truly expresses it, in “a piecemeal and desultory manner.” Add to the effects of this laxity of pleading, that of the desultory mode in which the hearing is conducted, during periods of an hour or two each, at intervals of weeks, and it is not possible to conceive a more effectual method of wasting time and encouraging dilatoriness. The reform that is requisite in the Master's Office is, therefore, rather a revision of the details, and the application of more exactitude to the forms of proceeding, and more stringency in the enforcing of punctuality in proceeding with any matter actually commenced, than any mighty dislocation of the machine as it now exists.

If certain times were fixed, beyond which states of facts and other equivalent pleadings should not be amended, nor fresh evidence brought in; if, after that, any respondent were to have a power corresponding to that of dismissing a bill for want of prosecution, or bringing on the cause to be heard, and any plaintiff a power corresponding to that given in court to a plaintiff against a contumaciously stationary defendant; if, in respect to matters ripe for hearing, the Master had a cause list of such matters, and took each and dealt with it to its conclusion before proceeding to another, the rapidity and efficacy of the transaction of business in the Master's Office would be, probably, doubled, without making any organic change.

If, in addition to these alterations, the Masters' Offices were open courts, there would probably be so great an improvement that the public would cease for a time, at any rate, to require anything further. No doubt, the framing of new rules of pleading and practice for the Master's Office would require great care and consideration; but that something of the kind must be done before long, if the Masters' Offices are intended to be preserved from total destruction, is clear. Nor do we despair of judicious reform, when we see even Masters stepping forth, and while satisfactorily explaining much that has been made the subject of unfounded animadversion, admitting the existence of grave defects, and even suggesting remedies.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 9, 1848.

As the period for the sitting of the Registration Courts is fast approaching, it may be convenient to many of our readers that we should recall to their recollection, and discuss a point which has been raised in several of the Registration Courts, and has, we believe, been the subject here of conflicting decision, but has not received any final decision in the Court of Common Pleas. The point in question is this, whether, where it is alleged by a competent objector, that a claimant to the right to vote is an alien, the Revising Barrister ought to cast upon the claimant the proof that he is personally qualified, and whether, in the event of such claimant refusing to give evidence in the matter, or giving insufficient evidence, he is to be struck off the list.

The clause of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 18, which gives rise to the doubt on this point, is the 40th, which, referring to the corrections that may be made by the Barrister in the register, provides, that "Where the name of any person inserted in any list of voters shall have been objected to by the overseers, or by any other person, and such other persons so objecting shall appear by himself, or by some one on his behalf, in support of such objection, and shall prove that he gave the notice and notices respectively required by this act to be given to him, every such Barrister shall then require it to be proved that the person so objected to was entitled, on the last day of July then next preceding, to have his name inserted in the list of voters in respect of the qualification described in such list; and in case the same all not be proved to the satisfaction of such Barrister, in case it shall be proved that such person was then incapacitated by any law or statute from voting in the election of members to serve in Parliament, such Barrister shall expunge the name of every such person from the said lists."

It is contended on the one side, that the effect of this clause is as follows:—That if a claimant is objected to, and proof given of the notice, then it is compulsory on the Barrister to throw on the claimant the onus of proof of his property qualification, and of that only; and if such proof is not satisfactory, he is to expunge the claimant's name. But that the Barrister is not required to call for proof of the claimant's personal title; and it is urged in support of this view, that the clause expressly disjoins the two grounds of claim, by the use of the language, "and where the name, &c., shall have been objected to &c., every such Barrister shall then require it to be proved, &c.; and in case the same shall not be proved to the satisfaction, &c., or in case it shall be proved that such person was then incapacitated &c., such Barrister shall expunge."

On the other hand it is argued, that by the original Reform Act, 2 Will. 4, the right of voting is restricted to male persons of full age, not subject to any legal incapacity; that the enactments of that act must be considered in construing the 40th clause of the 6 Vict.; that, therefore, when the name of any person is objected to and legal incapacity in the person is suggested, the Barrister is required by the 40th clause of the 6 Vict. as much to require proof of his personal capacity, as of the sufficiency of his qualification, if he is personally capable; because the Barrister is required to have it proved that the claimant is entitled in respect of the qualification described, which he clearly cannot be, if he is personally incapable of being entitled under any qualification. It is argued in support of this view, that the language of the subsequent part of the clause, whatever effect it might have in construing the former part, if that former part would bear a double meaning, cannot possibly be used to vary that construction, which, if the clause stood alone, would arise by inevitable inference. That, further, the alternative form of the latter part of the clause may receive a sensible explanation consistent with the construction put, in this view of the point, on the former part; for that the passage, "Or in case it shall be proved that such person was then incapacitated," refers to the case where the objector may in his notice have objected generally, or only to the property qualification, and may suggest ore tenus an objection to the personal title.

The point is one of considerable difficulty, but we apprehend that the effect of the two acts is, that where a claimant is objected to on the ground of personal incapacity, the Barrister must call for proof of the personal title. It will be observed that the duty of the Barrister arises under the 40th section of the act of Victoria, upon the name of a claimant being objected to generally, and that the form of notice of objection provided by the act, is also general. The general objection, therefore, destroys, so far as it is insisted upon in particulars, all prima facie title in the claimant, and puts it upon him to shew, according to the ordinary rules of evidence, that he is within the old Reform Act on all those points on which it is insisted by the objector, in support of his notice, that the claimant is not entitled. When, therefore, the objector alleges that the claimant is an alien, we apprehend that the Barrister is bound to obtain the best evidence that he can, in reference to the disputed fact. No doubt he may, if he thinks fit, call upon the objector first to produce his proof of alienage: but if the objector cannot or will not produce such proof, then we apprehend that the Barrister may not dispense with proof on the part of the claimant, of those facts in support of his title, which, according to the ordinary rules of evidence, are capable of proof by him. If the alleged ground of personal incapacity were, that the claimant was a convicted felon, of course the claimant could not be called upon to prove the negative; but if the objection is that he is an alien, then in calling upon him to prove his title, the Barrister is not calling upon him to prove the negative allegation that he is not an alien, but the positive allegation that he is a British-born subject; or, that being an alien, he has obtained letters of naturalization—positive allegations of which the proof is properly in the custody of the claimant himself.

We apprehend, in fact, that the broad meaning of the first part cited of the 40th clause of the 6 Vict. is, that where a claimant is objected to, he must prove his title, so far as objections to his prima facie title are suggested; if he does not, his name must be expunged. And that the second branch of the latter part of the clause does not operate to confine the first part to the question of property qualification merely, but is intended to apply to those cases in which, the qualification being proper, if the claimant could be personally entitled, the objector himself produces proof of a positive allegation of personal incapacity in the claimant, rendering it unnecessary thereby for the Barrister to call upon the claimant to prove his title. It may be added, in support of this view, that it never could have been the intention of the Legislature to take it for granted, that every person living in England is a British-born subject or a naturalized alien, and to throw on objectors in all such cases the proof of alienage, a fact, the proof of which, except in certain specified cases, it may be quite impossible for the objector to procure; and to absolve the claimant from proving his personal capacity, a fact of which he is the person most likely to possess the proof, and which in practice most men are easily capable of proving.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 16, 1848.

MANY actions within the letter and the spirit of the Small Debts Act (9 & 10 Vict. c. 95) continue to be brought in the superior courts. This course has been encouraged by the failure in some cases, on technical grounds, of the application to deprive the plaintiff of his costs. We know of a recent instance, in which an action was commenced in a superior court for 10*l*. After a verdict for the plaintiff, the defendant made three applications to a judge at chambers and one to the Court, before he could obtain leave to enter a suggestion under the above statute; the suggestion is now emurred to, and it is not improbable that he may be ultimately compelled to pay the costs of all these collateral proceedings, and also of the action. The source of all this difficulty was a defect in the affidavit on each application. The statute is wholly silent as to the mode of depriving the plaintiff of his costs, and thus, instead of simplifying the matter, as it might have been done by a few words, it has left it subject to the conflicting decisions and strict requirements of the old law. It appears to us, that the act should have contained a clause making the deprivation of costs a part of the finding of the jury, or the subject of a certificate from the judge, which should have appeared on the record. By either of these means the plaintiff would have been disabled by the record itself, from entering up judgment for costs, and no further step need have been taken in regard to them by either party. Theonus of proving his title to costs should have been on the plaintiff, as being an exceptive case. As it is, however, the defendant has to bear the burthen, and is compelled to make an application founded upon an affidavit, in which the utmost certainty is required, and if it be defective, except in the mere intitling of it, no second application is allowed on amended materials.

VOL. XII.

J J

Under these circumstances, we have thought it would be useful to our readers if we were to devote the present article to a consideration of the mode which should be adopted to deprive the plaintiff of costs under the new Small Debts Act.

First, the act not containing any specific directions on this point, we must have recourse to the practice which prevailed under analogous statutes previous to its passing, namely, Courts of Requests Acts. We find that, under them, in the absence of such directions, the proper course was to move on affidavit for leave to enter a suggestion on the record to deprive the plaintiff of costs. (See Barney v. Tubbs, 2 H. Black. 352).

The application may be to a judge at chambers or to the Court, and should call upon the plaintiff to shew cause why he should not bring in the record and carry in the roll, (if he has not already done so), and why the defendant should not be at liberty to enter thereon a suggestion to deprive the plaintiff of costs under the stat. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, or why the plaintiff should not be restrained from entering up judgment for the costs, and why in the meantime all proceedings should not be stayed.

Secondly, as to the time of making the application. It should not be before verdict. By sect. 129 of the above act, it is only where a verdict is found for the plaintiff for less than 20*l*. &c., that he is to lose his costs. The application, therefore, cannot be made after a judgment by default (which we regard as another defect in the act). See on this point Waller v. Dean, (8 Scott, N. R., 760); Meredith v. Drew, (1 Dowl. 252). It should in general be made within the time for moving for a new trial. (Garratt v. Babington, 1 D. & L. 820; and see Hippealey v. Laing, 4 B. & C. 863). But it may, it seems, be made at any time after verdict, and before judgment is signed. (Harding v. Howard, 9 Jur. 733; Robinson v. Learson, 1 D. & L. 756). Under former statutes the application was not permitted to be made after judgment was signed. (Calvert v. Howard, 5 M. & S. 510; Unwin v. King, 2 Dowl. 593; Watchorn v. Cook, 2 M. & S. 348). Under the new act, however, (s. 129), the plaintiff is to have judgment to recover the sum (less than 20*l.*), and no costs, and, therefore, it would seem that a judgment signed for the costs may be set aside as irregular, or reversed as to the costs, by writ of error. (See Newton v. Banks, 12 Jur. 230). In the case of a certificate for speedy execution, the defendant may apply within the first four days of next term, (Baddley v. Oliver, 1 Dowl. 598), but not afterwards. (Smith v. Temperley, 11 Jur. 244).

A judge at the assizes has no power to order the suggestion to be entered. (Baddley v. Oliver, supra).

In actions tried before the sheriff, the defendant has the same time for making the application as for moving for a new trial, although judgment may have been signed and execution issued; and in such case there need not be any order to stay the proceedings. (Johnson v. Beale, 5 Mee. & W. 276; Garratt v. Babington, 1 D. & L. 820; Bond v. Bailey, 3 Dowl. 808; and see Shaw v. Oates, 4 Dowl. 720; Crood v. Harris, Id. 616; Kidd v. Mason, 3 Dowl. 85; Bernard v. Burner, 5 Dowl. 170).

The application cannot be made to the Court on the last day of term. (Anon., 4 Man. & Gr. 906).

Thirdly, the affidavit must clearly bring the case within the provisions of the act. (Newton v. Peacock, 1 Dowl. 677).

Under the Middlesex Court of Requests Act, it was held necessary to state expressly that the defendant was not liable to be summoned to the inferior court. (Unwin v. King, 2 Dowl. 492; Fossett v. Godfrey, Id. 587). But this is not in general necessary. (Burbidge v. Marzin, 12 Mee. & W. 8; Heath v. Seagur, 8 Dowl. 424). The Middlesex Act contained those words as one of the terms required for the jurisdiction of the inferior court. The new act does not contain such words, but the analogous expression in it is, "for which a plaint might have been entered in any court holden under this act." (Compare sect. 129 of 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, with sect. 19 of 23 Geo. 2, c. 33).

Where the act applies to a defendant residing within the jurisdiction, (as the new act does, sect. 128), the affidavit should shew that he resided there at the time of action brought. (Moreau v. Hicks, 1 Har. & W. 87; see Bond v. Bailey, 3 Dowl. 808; and Burton v. Campbell, 6 Dowl. 451).

Where required by the act, as it is by the new act, the affidavit should state that the cause of action arose within the jurisdiction. But, in a case under the Middlesex Court of Requests Act, it was held sufficient without this statement, and that it lay on the plaintiff to make out the contrary if he could. (Bishop v. Marsh, 8 Scott, 128; Thorn v. Chinnock, 1 Scott, N. R. 138).

It is not in general necessary to shew that the case is not within a proviso in another section of the act, excepting certain cases from the operation of it. (Burbidge v. Marzin, supra; Pomfrey v. Cottrel, 1 D. & L. 845). But it has been held that sect. 128 of the new act is not a proviso, but a clause excepting certain cases from the obligation to sue in the county court, and that defendant must shew on his affidavit a suggestion that his is not one of these cases. He must, therefore, negative these exceptions, and shew, for example, that he did not live more than twenty miles from the plaintiff, (Meeten v. Nicholls, 12 Jur. 420), and also that the defendant at the time of action brought dwelt or carried on business within the jurisdiction of the county court; it is not sufficient merely to state that the cause of action arose within the jurisdiction of the court. (Matthew v. Broughall, 12 Jur. 419; and see Peterson v. Davis, Id. 562; and Thorne v. Jackson, 3 C. B. 681). But it need not allege that the judge did not grant a certificate that the cause was fit to be tried in the superior court, this being an exception in sect. 129, and one particularly within the knowledge of the plaintiff. (Nind v. Rhodes, 17 Law Journ., N. S., Q. B., 179).

To decide as to the necessary statements in the affidavit, the enacting clause which deprives the plaintiff of costs should be carefully considered, and the case brought within it.

By that clause, (sect. 129), "If any action shall be commenced after the passing of this act in any superior court, for any cause other than those lastly hereinbefore specified, for which a plaint might have been entered in any court holden under this act," and the verdict is for a sum under 20*l.*, &c., the plaintiff is not to have costs, unless the judge certify.

The "causes lastly hereinbefore specified" are contained in sect. 128, and must be negated. It is probably, sufficient merely to follow the other words, and to state that it is a cause for which a plaint might have been entered in the county court, but until this is determined by authority, it is safer to refer back to sect. 58, defining the cases in which a plaint may be entered, and to follow its words, even those contained in the proviso.

We subjoin a form of affidavit, which appears to contain all that is required, and which may be found useful in practice:—

"Form of Affidavit for an Application to deprive the Plaintiff of Costs in an Action of Contract under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95.

"[Intitle in court and name, and describe deponent in the usual manner,] maketh oath and saith that this action is a plea of personal action, founded on contract, wherein the debt claimed by the plaintiff was not over is more than 20*l.*, but only £—, and that this action was commenced in this honourable court, on the — day of —, A. D. 184—, and a verdict was found herein for the plaintiff for the sum of £—, and no more, but judgment thereon has not yet been signed, [or, if signed, state when, and whether for costs as well as the debt, and whether under a certificate for speedy execution, or on a trial before the sheriff.] And this deponent further saith, that before and at the time of this action, a county court for the recovery of debts and demands under and according to the provisions of the act of Parliament made and passed in a session of Parliament holden in the ninth and tenth years of the reign of her present Majesty Queen Victoria, intituled "An Act for the more easy Recovery of Small Debts and Demands n England," had been and was established, constituted, and holden in and for the district of —, in the county of —, under, by, and according to the said act of Parliament. And this deponent further saith, that, before and at the time of the commencement of this action, the defendant dwelt at —, within the said district of —, in the said county of —, and within the jurisdiction of the said county court, and that the cause of action for and in respect of which this action was brought arose wholly [or in a material point, that is to say et c., status in what respect] within the jurisdiction of the said county court, and that a plaint might have been entered in the said county court for the said cause of action. And this deponent further saith, that at the time of the commencement of this action, the plaintiff did not dwell more than twenty miles from the defendant, and that neither the plaintiff nor the defendant at the time of the commencement of this action was an officer of the said county court. And this deponent further saith, that this action is not an action of ejectment, or an action in which title to any corporeal or incorporeal hereditaments, or to any toll, fair, market, franchise, was or could be in question, or in which the validity of any devise, bequest, or limitation under any will or settlement might or could be, or was, disputed, or an action for a malicious prosecution, or for a libel, or for slander, or for criminal conversation, or for seduction, or for breach of promise of marriage."

COLLYER'S LAW OF PARTNERSHIP.

Second Edition, greatly enlarged.

A PRACTICAL TREATISE ON THE LAW OF PARTNERSHIP, including Partnerships in Mines, Joint-Stock Companies, and Ships, with an Appendix of Forms. By JOHN COLLYER, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn, Barrister at Law.

In Six very thick octavo Volumes, price 61. 10s. In strong cloth bds., BURN'S JUSTICE OF THE PEACE AND PARISH OFFICER. The Twenty-ninth Edition, corrected and greatly enlarged, containing the Statutes and Cases to 7 & 8 Vict., inclusive, with a New Collection of Precedents. The Title "Poor" by Mr. Commissioner BERE, of the Exeter District Court of Bankruptcy; the rest of the Work by THOMAS HITT, Esq., of the Inner Temple.

On introducing a new and greatly improved edition of an old-established book, like "Burn's Justice," to the notice of the Members of the Magistracy and the Legal Profession, the Publishers need only point attention to the claims which it has upon two such large and influential bodies, to ensure a success similar to that which has attended all previous Editions. Since the year 1837 (the date of the last edition) a considerable number of important Statutes have been passed; by several of those statutes the executive power of the Magistrate has been somewhat restricted, and by others extended, while the whole duties of the office are undergone too many changes not to render a New Edition (amending every Act and decision to the present time) a valuable and necessary addition to the Libraries of Gentlemen engaged in the Local Administration of Justice. The Six Volumes have received a thorough revision; the Forms have been re-modelled, and carefully adapted to the recent changes; several new Titles (created by modern enactments) have been introduced, and great exertions have been made to ensure a correct and full development of the Law as it now stands. The title "Poor," which occupies the whole of the Fourth Volume, has again been prepared by Mr. Commissioner BERE; and his object has been to furnish the user at full length, being satisfied that no compendious abstract, however carefully made, would supply a satisfactory Manual for those who attend the Quarter Sessions. The Marginal Notes and the Index are, however, abridgements of the Cases, so that the general principles of the Law may be ascertained without reading the fuller statement. The real utility of the Work as an authority, presenting the cases in detail, and superseding the Reports themselves, is thereby preserved, at the same time that the necessity of reading the whole is obviated by the fullness of the Marginal Note.

OUR readers are well aware of the great and continual outcry that has been made of late years about the loquacity of Parliament; and that a committee of the House of Commons has during the past session set for the purpose of inquiring into the subject, and devising means of limiting the verbosity of its debates. During that inquiry, much amusing as well as instructive evidence has been given by Monsieur Guizot on the subject of the celebrated cloture system adopted in the French Chamber of Deputies—amusing, as shewing he desperate efforts of that Chamber to attain method; instructive, as shewing how vain are rules and regulations not supported by substance.

We fully agree with all the writers and speakers in and out of Parliament who have asserted, that Parliament has been for many years past extraordinarily loquacious. But we do not go with those who thence take leave to assert that Parliament has stultified itself and ruined the country; nor do we conceive that the cloture, or any other merely technical rule, can effectually check that loquacity. On the contrary, we hold, and will endeavour to shew, (at the risk of being thought fond of paradox), that the loquacity of Parliament has been for some time, is still, and will be yet for some time, a thing inherent in its very existence—a quality flowing from the nature of things; a result of substance;—therefore, that, so far from sinning by its verbosity, Parliament is not only doing what it cannot help doing, but is fulfilling a beneficial purpose; and that all attempts at checking that verbosity, by hour timing, as in America; by the cloture, as in France; or by any other merely technical rule out of harmony with the state of political affairs, will equally fail. The real truth, we believe, is this, that there is not much for Parliament to do—at least, which is the same thing, not much that could by any possibility be carried into effect. We will quote, as apt for the illustration of our argument, though it was intended in a totally opposite sense, a passage from a cotemporary:—

“In a word,” says the writer, “the endless speech-making and its consequence, or, at least, its concomitant, the endless adjournments, are the ruin of the House of Commons and the bane of the country. Whatever is the least important is sure to consume the most time. Whatever is of any importance is put off for the first five months of every session, and crammed as into a corner into the last three or four weeks. Everything is deferred and adjourned,—the recess approaches, that is, the appointed day of grouse-shooting is at hand, and then all the bills absolutely necessary for the Government to carry are passed in a hurry and left to be amended after their blundering structure has done serious, often remediless, mischief; all the other bills, comprehending measures far more important, but not necessary for the service of the year, are laid upon the shelf, and left to take the chance of some one who has survived the long vacation and the Christmas holidays, taking them down and once more endeavouring to make the most imbecile of legislative bodies direct its attention to their merits.” And further, “Public business is stopt, session after session passes, and the country bitterly complains that nothing is done. Not only much is left undone, but the little that is done suffers in both its proportions and its qualities. By the same evil the Government is reduced to a perpetual compromise, and becomes nearly as impotent as the Parliament; for while any two or three endless speakers have the power of causing a prolonged debate, and so defeating any measure, its authors are fain to give up half to save the remainder. All this results from the Common's House being paralysed, though the palsy does not at all affect its speech, for, truth to tell, speaking is the only attribute that remains to this deplorable body."

These passages express very well the view entertained by many, of the present state of Parliament and its consequences; but, we apprehend, that it is precisely because Parliament does little but talk and pass the estimates, that it is doing its present duty. When it is said, that "whatever is the least important is sure to consume the most time," it is assumed, that passing what are termed great measures, is the most important business of Parliament. But, we apprehend, that if the direct and consequential effects of that really great and important measure, the Reform Act, are looked at, it will be seen, that the most important thing for Parliament to do for some time past, and possibly for some time to come, has been and will be, to do nothing except allow the constitution formed by that great act, to consolidate itself, without officious interference; and to allow the great, though inferior measures, which followed it, to take effect before proceeding to do again something great. The Reform Act was, as all men know, not the growth of a session, nor of ten sessions; it was a consequence of a very steady and gradual change in the strength of classes and parties. Legislative or forcible re-arrangement of the titles to overt political power had become inevitable. The country chose the former, and whatever may have been thought at the time, of the nature of the revolution, whatever may have been thought on the question whether it amounted to a revolution, it is, now that we look back upon the Reform Act as historical, scarcely denied by any, that it was, in effect, a political revolution. It is pleasing to perceive that our country is so civilised as to be capable of effecting a revolution in such a manner. But such a change in the distribution of political power as was effected by the Reform Act, was not likely to be unattended by many minor though still immense changes. Nor was it. As all know, it was followed by large changes in the administration of our two most important foreign dependencies. It was followed by large changes in the laws; by considerable changes in the church, and many others of importance. And it may, we think, be asserted, that nearly all the great social changes that had been previously considered and discussed, and, if we may use the term, thoroughly ransacked; all the changes on which the country had, as it were, eliminated its opinion, from the mass of conflicting views, were effected between the passing of the Reform Act and the year 1840. Thenceforth but little could be done for some time by Parliament, except routine business; because on all important subjects, on all those on which the so much-loved "great measures" can be founded, opinions, so far from being sifted and classified so as to shew a preponderance, had scarcely been even entertained. Parliament, it must be remembered, can do nothing, at least since the Reform Act, unless it represents a decided and preponderant opinion. Until the public has acquired such an opinion, all that Parliament can do is to talk and make the public talk. Such, we say, has been the state of things for the last seven or eight years.

There has been no great object on which the public has, we will not say, been agreed, but on which there has been even a clear opinion maintained by even a small majority. On the contrary, on all such subjects every society has been a Babel, in which no two men speak the same tongue. And as since the Reform Act great masses of thinkers, for good or for evil, have peopled Parliament with their representatives, which before was not represented, it has followed, as a matter of course, that Parliament has been torn by endless debates. But out of those debates, endless as they are, wearisome as they are, no doubt, to the listeners, two good things have grown, viz. the exhaustion of an activity for which there is nothing practical to do, and which would spend itself in mischief if it did not spend itself in talk; and the discussion of doctrines; the dissemination of information; the elimination of opinions; and the gradual formation of that preponderant public opinion, which, when the public has really worked out and consolidated all the results of the Reform Act, will generate other necessary public measures at the right moment.

In the meantime Parliament must talk or disolve; and we submit it to our constitutional readers whether it is not better to retain even a verbose Parliament than to be governed without.

POINTS ON THE LAW AND PRACTICE OF INJUNCTION.

Of the Jurisdiction in general.—An injunction was granted ex parte against two defendants A. and B., (A. being the agent of a foreign Government for discharging certain claims upon that Government by British subjects), restraining A. from paying to B. and B. from receiving, monies alleged by the plaintiff to be due to him in respect of the claims which it was A.'s sole business in this country to adjust and settle. A. swore that he was attached to the foreign embassy, and was under the control of the ambassador, and had no power, authority, or discretion of his own in regard to the payments in question. The Court dissolved the injunction as against A., on the ground that he was in the nature of a servant of the ambassador representing his sovereign, and was bound to take and act according to his directions. That, having regard to the facts stated in his affidavit, if he did not come literally within the 7 Ann. c. 12, he brought himself within that class or description to which the law afforded protection against arrest of the person or seizure of the property; and, therefore, an injunction would be utterly fruitless and nugatory*.

It is clearly settled, that a husband may sell his wife's term for years; but an injunction will be granted at the suit of a married woman entitled to separate estate, to restrain the husband from disposing of or intermeddling with such separate estate. This was done in Green v. Green, (5 Hare, 400, n.), in which leasehold houses and personal chattels, and some money in a savings' bank, were settled to the separate use of the plaintiff. The husband band, one of the defendants, took possession and disposed of some of the chattels, and entered into and kept possession of one of the houses, and threatened to take possession of the money in the savings' bank. An injunction was granted to restrain him from doing these acts, and in particular from continuing in possession of the house. A motion to dissolve was refused by the Vice-Chancellor of England. The objection was taken as to that part of the order which restrained the husband from continuing in possession of the house, that it amounted in fact to a divorce à mensa et thoro. To this the Court answered, that if it was so, the husband had his remedy in the Ecclesiastical Court. Perhaps a more solid objection to that part of the order would have been, that it was in fact an equitable ejectment.

The question, whether an agreement between parties with respect to their conduct as to proceedings on bills before Parliament, or under acts of Parliament, will be enforced by injunction, which was partly raised in Lord Pease v. The Eastern Counties Railway Company, (1 Railw. Cas. 458), has received a final determination in The Stockton and Hartlepool Railway Company v. The Leeds and Thirsk Railway Company, (12 Jur. 713 and 735). In that case, the defendants had agreed not to oppose a certain bill before Parliament, and afterwards attempted to oppose it. The question was, whether they should be restrained, and the Vice-Chancellor of England, and on appeal the Lord Chancellor, held, that there was no doubt on the subject as to jurisdiction, and supported an injunction.

Injunctions against Wastes by Ecclesiastical Persons.]

—Generally, it is beyond question, that a parson may not commit waste of any kind; and generally, also, it may be said, that to convert pasture into plough land is waste; a covenant, for instance, as between lessor and lessee to manage in a husband-like manner, is broken by ploughing up meadows. But it is not every conversion of pasture into plough land that is waste, even on the part of a parson. And where it appeared that part of the glebe belonging to a rectory which was ancient pasture, was intermixed with moss and weed, and the defendant ploughed it up for the purpose of cleaning it and relaying with grass, and swore that he believed the effect of his so proceeding would be to improve the land and increase the value of the rectory, Lord Langdale, M. R., refused to sustain an injunction*. It is not, however, to be collected from this case that wherever it may appear as the reasonable result of the evidence, that the ploughing up of ancient meadow will be for the benefit of the land, that the Court would refuse to prevent the party in possession from so ploughing it up. The reasoning of the judgment shews that it is only intended to apply to cases where the right of absolute ownership can never vest in any person, as in the case of an ecclesiastical corporation, and where therefore to hold the mere ploughing up of pasture or other conversion to be restrainable waste, without reference to its intended and probable effects, would be to impose upon lands held under such tenure the fetters of a permanent incapacity to be improved. "By the law," said his Lordship, "as admitted between the lessor and lessee, or between tenant for life and reversioner, very valuable improvements in agriculture may be prevented during the temporary possession of a tenant or a succession of tenants for years or for life. The time, however, comes when the fetters imposed by the contract or relation between the parties may be released; but if you apply the same law to the case of a parson's glebe, the course of husbandry and cultivation must remain the same in all times. What is once arable or pasture must always continue so; and no rector or vicar must employ any part of his glebe in any other manner than he found it employed, unless he can prove that it had been otherwise employed within some limited antecedent time.

"In a close which he cannot prove to have been employed otherwise than as meadow, he is not to plough nor to make an orchard, nor to plant a bed of potatoes, however convenient and useful it might be for the parsonage that he should do so. He must do nothing which, as between landlord and lessee for years, the law has considered to be waste. No authority has been cited for so general a proposition, nor even upon the particular question, whether the Court ought to restrain the particular act now complained of, and the only case of which I am aware in which the Court has interfered to stay the conversion of glebe meadow into pasture is the case of Hoskins v. Featherstone, where the bill was filed not against the incumbent, but against the widow of an incumbent, who was doing the acts complained of during a vacancy." C. S. D.

A SUMMARY OF THE LAW OF MODERN PLEADING, incident to the Rules of Hilary Term, 1834; with such of the Decisions on Practice, Evidence, and Costs, as are closely connected with that subject. Also, copious Analysis of the Cases and Pleadings. By ROBERTS PHILIP TYREWHITT, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"The reports of the 'Common-law Commissioners' suggested extensive changes in the practice on this important subject, (Pleading), which changes, whether improvements or not, were sanctioned by Parliament, and embodied by all the common-law courts in general rules, dated Hilary Term, 1834. It was then sought to adapt old principles to modern exigencies, and to link the present with the past by regulating the transition—with what success the work before us attempts to develop. It embodies in its text the pith of the decisions on 'Modern Pleading,' as incident to the above 'rules,' and condenses in the notes other valuable matter at present spread over lengthy 'reports.' The latter feature is adapted to render the volume more extensively useful in courts of Nisi Prius, particularly on the circuits, and in the library of country practitioners. Nor is it rigorously limited to its chief object; but includes the course of decisions on the replication de injuria in its extended application, as well as on the modern acts respecting land, tithes, mines, commons, ways, and easements, together with so much of the law of amendment, evidence, and costs as elucidates the new rules of pleading. On the whole, this work appears to have been prepared with much care and industry, and will be found to afford in small comparative compass a useful adjunct to the works of Stephen and Chitty."—Times, Oct. 29th, 1846.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 30, 1848.

THE case of Fulham v. M'Carthy, (12 Jur. 757), which, as our readers will recollect, caused a considerable public sensation at the time when it was heard before the House of Lords, was decided on a point of pure pleading; the plaintiffs having had the incaution to join as co-plaintiffs two persons, one of whom only could have the interest on which the bill was founded. The various interesting questions of substance involved in the case pass, therefore, undecided. The material one is that pointed at in the judgment of Lord Brougham, viz. whether a person, having voluntarily taken a vow to obey the direction of another, and, pursuant to such vow, disposing of property against his own wish, under the direction of the person whose direction he has vowed to obey, can be said to be under that species of duress which will avoid a conveyance of property?—a question, indeed, as his Lordship expresses it, of considerable nicety.

Of course, there can be no doubt that a vow to obey the direction of another, cannot import legality into an act in itself illegal. If a monk, or any other person, were to vow obedience to the orders of his superior, of course such vow would not render valid a gift in mortmain, not effected pursuant to those forms of law without which gifts in mortmain are by law invalid. But if the gift be not in itself, or by reason of the neglect of any prescribed form, invalid, the question reduces itself simply to this: whether a person sui juris, binding himself by vow, or by such obligation as he deems binding on his conscience, to do all such lawful acts, among other things, to convey, as I direct, can say, when I do direct him to convey, that he is under pressure—that species of pressure which will induce a court of equity to set aside the transaction? For the purpose of this inquiry, let us recollect what is the principle on which equity proceeds in cases of pressure. The principle is, that the grantor has been, by an influence that he could not resist, compelled as it were to do what, if left unfettered, it would not appear that he would have done. But in all the cases the circumstances have been, that, immediately before the conveyance, the grantor was free, or that, if he conveyed in pursuance of any promise or agreement, he was not, at the time of such promise or agreement, competent to make it; so that the pressure has been the immediate pressure of the grantee.

If a person sui juris binds himself by law to convey according to the direction of another, it is of course unquestioned, that a conveyance, executed according to that contract, is good, however much it may be against the wishes of the grantor. No doubt, in such cases, an inquiry might be granted on a sufficient case made, whether the agreement to convey was unduly obtained, the agreement to convey being, in fact, the act by which the grantor parted with his interest. But if the agreement to convey is unimpeachable, it would be unheard of to say, that the insisting upon its performance by the party purporting to be entitled to take advantage of it would be an act of fraudulent pressure on his part. The question, then, seems to resolve itself into this: whether a party, competent to deal with his present and future interests, contracting, not by a form of contract which the law enforces, but by a form of contract which he holds himself bound merely in conscience to fulfil, which he, at the time he enters into it, intends to be binding upon him, the force of which upon his conscience he knows, is afterwards to be released in equity from the consequences of that completion of his contract, which he has effected under the pressure of the very contract itself? It is a fallacy to say, that in such a case as that of Fulham v. M'Carthy, the party assigning is forced into it by the pressure exercised by

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"There is something eminently practical in the general aspect of the book; it is small, compact of print and law, and clearly arranged and set forth."—The Jurist.

"No turf-man, betting-man, horse-dealer, stable-keeper, or in fact any other description of horseman will be able to get on in his business without this book."—The Veterinarian.

"This a most useful book, edited by Mr. G. H. H. Oliphant, a Barrister, and embraces every matter in which the Horse is concerned. Every question is treated of with clearness and accuracy, and the law as it exists is explained and demonstrated by recent decisions in the Courts of Law. The question respecting Derby Clubs and their legality forms a prominent portion of the work, and we unhesitatingly recommend its possession to all interested in the numerous subjects on which it treats."—Bell's Life.

the superior. It may be quite true that the assignor does not wish to assign. It may be quite true that his act is not that of a free agent; that, in assigning, he assigns under compulsion. But the compulsion is not at all the sort of compulsion to which equity looks in setting aside deeds. It is a compulsion consequent upon his own previous contract, and is properly analogous to that of a party who has covenanted to assign as A. shall appoint, and not at all to that suggested by the affidavit of one of the parties, of a person who assigns under the pressure of a threat of instant death. We humbly submit that the true inquiry in this sort of case is, whether the vow is lawful; whether the party making the vow is at the time competent to make it; and, whether he makes it freely, or under such pressure as a court of equity will deem fraudulent. If the answer to these inquiries is favourable, if the vow be lawful and lawfully made, we apprehend cadit questio. The vow is simply a contract not capable of being enforced at law. The subsequent assignment is merely compliance with the contract, and must take its legality or illegality from the contract itself. If the contract was made under pressure, it could not stand, even if good at law, a fortiori, if, like a vow, it is a mere parol promise. But if it was not made under pressure, we conceive that the fact of the assignor being urged to comply with it, by reference to his fears of future punishment, no more amounts to inequitable pressure than an intimation to a covenantor that if he does not comply with his covenant, he would expose himself to an action in one of the courts of this world for the breach of it, would amount to inequitable pressure. The whole question is, then, whether it is contrary to the policy of the law that a person should bind himself by reference to his belief or religious scruples, to do something in itself not unlawful? And we apprehend the law does not so far interfere with religious freedom, as to say that a man may not so bind himself.

Sect. 1. Sitting Members may, in all Cases of Election Petitions presented before the 1st of March, object to the Recognisance, on Grounds omitted to be specified in recited Act.

2. *Select Committee appointed to try Election Petition shall inquire first into such preliminary Objection, and if Recognisance be good proceed to try the Merits of the Return. 4. Recited Act and this Act to be read as one.

5. Act may be amended, &c.

Whereas petitions have been presented in several cases to the House of Commons, complaining of an undue election or return of a member or members to serve in Parliament: And whereas such petitions are indorsed by a certificate under the hand of the examiner of recognisances, to the effect that the recognisances required by an act passed in the 7 & 8 Vict. [c. 103], intituled "An Act to amend the Laws for the Trial of controverted Elections of Members to serve in Parliament," have been entered into and received by him, with the affidavits thereunto annexed: And whereas in some of such cases doubts have been entertained as to the validity of the recognisances so entered into as aforesaid: And whereas in some of the cases wherein such doubts have been entertained as aforesaid other petitions have also been presented from the sitting member or members, complaining of the invalidity of the recognisances entered into in pursuance of the said recited act, and praying for relief in the premises: And whereas it is desirable that the doubts hereinbefore mentioned should be put an end to, and that a mode of proceeding should be prescribed with respect to the determination of the several before-mentioned petitions: Be it therefore enacted, &c., That in all cases of election petitions which shall have been presented before the 1st of March in the present year, and which shall after the passing of this act be tried during the present session of Parliament, it shall be lawful for all and every the sitting members and member against whose return any such petition shall have been presented, by themselves or himself, or their or his agents or agent, to deliver into the clerk of the general committee of elections, not later than six of the clock in the afternoon on the sixth day next before the day appointed for choosing the committee to try the petition complaining of such election or return, notice in writing that a preliminary objection will be made before such select committee to the form or substance of the recognisance or recognisances entered into by or on behalf of the petitioner or petitioners against such return, provided that the ground or grounds of such objection be not such as would, under the said recited act, have entitled any sitting member petitioned against to object to the sureties or any of them who shall have entered into such recognisance or recognisances, and that the grounds of objection be stated in such notice.

2. That in all cases in which such notice of objection shall have been delivered in as aforesaid, the select committee chosen to try the election petition or election petitions to which such notice relates, shall in the first instance inquire into and decide upon such preliminary objection; and such select committee shall have, for the purpose of such inquiry and decision, all the powers given to select committees by the said recited act for the purpose of trying the merits of the return or election petitioned against; and if such select committee shall be of opinion that such recognisance or recognisances is or are good and valid for all the intents and purposes of the said recited act, such committee shall decide that the same is or are good, and shall thereafter proceed to try the merits of the return or election the petition relating to which shall have been referred to them: and if such committee shall be of opinion that the recognisance or recognisances objected to are void, and that such invalidity is in any degree attributable to the neglect or laches of the petitioner or petitioners, or the party or parties entering into such recognisance or recognisances, or their or any of their agents, then the committee shall report to the House accordingly, and no farther proceeding shall be had upon such petition or petitions, and the order referring the same to such select committee shall be discharged; and if such select committee shall be of opinion that such recognisance or recognisances are void, as hereinbefore mentioned, but that any such invalidity as aforesaid is in no degree attributable to the neglect or laches of the petitioner or petitioners, or of the party or parties entering into such recognisance or recognisances, or their or any of their agents, or shall be of opinion that the validity of such recognisance or recognisances is doubtful, or that any party for whose security such recognisance or recognisances was or were intended might be embarrassed in enforcing the same, then the committee shall (as the case may be) decide accordingly, and in either case that such recognisance or recognisances may be amended; and thereupon, if the person or persons who shall have entered into such recognisance or recognisances, or the survivors or survivor of them, shall consent thereto, in writing signed by his or their hand or hands, the committees shall forthwith, by their chairman, amend such recognisance or recognisances, by making the same conformable to the form of recognisance contained in the schedule to the said recited act, and the chairman shall write in the margin of the same, against every amendment, the words "amended by committee," and shall sign his name to such words; or it shall be lawful for the petitioner or petitioners forthwith, before the examiner of recognisances who shall for that purpose attend the committee, to enter into a new recognisance or new recognisances, with sufficient sureties, (as required by the said recited act), previously approved of by the committee, who shall have, for the purpose of inquiring into the sufficiency of such sureties, all the said powers given to select committees by the said recited act, and the committee shall also be satisfied that the new recognisance or recognisances is or are in due form and valid; and the committee, having made such amendment, or being satisfied with such new recognisance or recognisances, shall decide that the recognisance or recognisances so amended or newly entered into is or are good, and shall proceed to try the merits of the return or election as aforesaid; but if the person or persons who shall have entered into such recognisance or recognisances shall not consent in manner aforesaid to such amendment, and if no new recognisance or recognisances shall be entered into as aforesaid, the committee shall report to the House that such recognisance or recognisances ought to be amended, or new recognisances entered into, but that the parties have not consented to such amendment or entered into new recognisances, and thereupon no further proceedings shall be had upon the petition referred to such committee, and the order referring the same to them shall be discharged.

3. That all and every recognisances and recognisance which shall be amended by any select committee shall after such amendment have, and shall be held and taken in all courts to have had, from the time when the same were or was entered into, the same force and effect for all intents and purposes whatsoever as if the same when entered into had been in the words and figures in which the same shall be when so amended as aforesaid; and the marginal words "amended by committee," written against any amendment in the same, and appearing to be signed as aforesaid, shall be evidence in all courts that such amendment was duly made, and such marginal words duly signed, under the authority of this act; and any new recognisance or recognisances which shall be entered into under the authority of this act shall have, and shall be taken to have had from before the receiving of the petition to which the same shall relate, the same force and effect to all intents and purposes as if the same had been duly entered into under the said recited act before the receiving of such petition, and as if the examiner of recognisances had reported to the Speaker that the sureties entering into the same are unobjectionable; and the decision of every select committee that any recognisance or recognisances, or that any amended recognisance or recognisances, is or are good, shall be final and conclusive against all parties, and the validity of any such recognisance or recognisances shall not be called in question in any court upon any ground or pretence whatever.

4. That the said recited act and this act shall be read and construed together as one act.

5. That this act may be amended or repealed by any act to be passed in this session of Parliament.

Whereas the communication now by law required to be made by the overseers or guardians of any parish seeking to enforce an order for the removal of a poor person to the overseers or guardians of the parish to which such poor person is intended to be removed, of a copy of the examination upon which such order has been made, has been found to produce much expensive and useless litigation upon points of mere form, so that few cases of appeals against such order are now decided upon the merits: for remedy thereof be it enacted, &c. that so much of an act passed in the session of Parliament holden in the 4 & 5 Will. 4, [c. 76.] intituled "An Act for the Amendment and better Administration of the Laws relating to the Poor in England and Wales," as provides, in cases of orders of removal, that the notice thereby required to be sent by the overseers or guardians of the parish obtaining the order shall be accompanied by a copy of the examination upon which such order was made, shall be and the same is hereby repealed.

2. That instead thereof such notice shall be accompanied by a statement in writing under the hands of such overseers or such guardians, or any three or more of such guardians, setting forth the grounds of such removal, including the particulars of the settlement or settlements relied upon in support thereof: provided always, that on the hearing of any appeal against any order of removal it shall not be lawful for the respondents to go into or give evidence of any other grounds of removal than those set forth in such statement.

3. That the clerk to the justices who shall make any order of removal shall keep the depositions upon which such order was made, and shall within seven days furnish a copy of such depositions to the overseers or guardians as aforesaid of the parish to which the removal is by such order directed to be made, if such overseers or such guardians shall apply for such copy, and pay for the same at the rate of two-pence for every folio of seventy-two words; provided, that no omission or delay in furnishing such copy of the depositions shall be deemed or construed to be any ground of appeal against the order of removal; provided also, that on the trial of any appeal against an order of removal no such order shall be quashed or set aside, either wholly or in part, on the ground that such depositions do not furnish sufficient evidence to support, or that any matter therein contained or omitted raises, an objection to the order or grounds of removal.

4. And whereas a statement of the grounds of removal or of appeal is required to be communicated for the purpose of enabling the party receiving it to inquire into the subject of such statement, and, if need be, to prepare for trial; be it therefore enacted, That upon the hearing of any appeal against an order of removal no objection whatever on account of any defect in the form of setting forth any ground of removal or of appeal in any such statement shall be allowed, and no objection to the reception of legal evidence offered in support of a ground of removal or appeal alleged to be set forth in any such statement shall prevail, unless the Court shall be of opinion that such alleged ground is so imperfectly or incorrectly set forth as to be insufficient to enable the party receiving the same to inquire into the subject of such statement, and to prepare for trial: provided always, that in all cases where the Court shall be of opinion that any such objection to such statement or to the reception of evidence ought to prevail, it shall be lawful for such Court, if it shall so think fit, to cause any such statement of grounds of removal or appeal to be forthwith amended by some officer of the Court or otherwise, on such terms as to payment of costs to the other party, or postponing the trial to another day in the same sessions or to the next subsequent sessions, or both payment of costs and postponement, as to such Court shall appear just and reasonable.

5. That if either of the parties to the said appeal shall have cluded in the statement of grounds of removal or of appeal against the opposite party any ground or grounds of removal of appeal which shall, in the opinion of the Court determining the appeal, be frivolous and vexatious, such party shall be liable, at the discretion of the said Court, to pay the whole or any part of the costs incurred by the other party in disputing any such ground or grounds, such costs to be recovered in the same manner as any penalties or forfeitures are recoverable under the said act passed in the session of Parliament holden in the fourth and fifth years of the reign of his late Majesty King William the Fourth.

6. That if, upon the trial of any appeal against an order of removal, or upon the return to a writ of certiorari, any objection shall be made on account of any omission or mistake in the drawing up of such order, and it shall be shewn to the satisfaction of the Court that sufficient grounds were in proof before the magistrates making such order to have authorised the drawing up thereof free from the said omission or mistake, it shall be lawful for the Court, upon such terms as to payment of costs as it shall think fit, to amend such order of removal, and to give judgment as if no such omission or mistake had existed: provided always, that no objection on account of any omission or mistake in an order of removal brought up upon a return to a writ of certiorari shall be allowed, unless such omission or mistake shall have been specified in the rule for bringing such writ of certiorari.

7. That the decision of the Court upon the hearing of any appeal against any order of removal, as well upon the sufficiency and effect of the statement of the grounds of removal and of appeal, and of the notice of chargeability, and of the copy or counterpart of the order of removal sent to the appellant parish, as upon the amending or refusing to amend the order of removal as aforesaid or the statement of grounds of removal or appeal, shall be final, and shall not be liable to be reviewed in any Court, by means of a writ of certiorari or mandamus, or otherwise.

8. That in any case in which an order shall have been made for the removal of any poor person, and a copy or counterpart thereof sent as by law required, it shall and may be lawful for the overseers or guardians of the parish who shall have obtained such order of removal, whether any notice of appeal against such order shall or shall not have been given, and whether any appeal shall have been entered or not, to abandon such order by notice in writing under the hands of such overseers or guardians, or any three or more of such guardians, to be sent by post or delivered to the overseers or guardians as aforesaid of the parish to which such person is by the said order directed to be removed; and thereupon the said order, and all proceedings consequent thereon, shall become and be null and void to all intents and purposes as if the same had not been made, and shall not be in any way given in evidence in any case any other order of removal of the same person shall be obtained: provided always, that in all cases of such abandonment the overseers or guardians of the parish so abandoning shall say to the overseers or guardians of the parish to which such person is by the said order directed to be removed the costs which the said last-mentioned overseers or guardians shall have incurred by reason of such order, and of all subsequent proceedings thereon, which costs the proper officer of the Court before whom any such appeal (if it had not been abandoned) might have been brought shall and he is hereby required, upon application, to tax and ascertain at any time, whether the Court shall be sitting or not, upon production to him of such notice of abandonment, and upon proof to him that such reasonable notice of taxation, together with a copy of the bill of costs, was given to the overseers or guardians abandoning such order as the distance between the parishes shall in his judgment require, and thereupon the sum allowed for costs, including the usual costs of taxation, which such officer is hereby empowered to charge and receive, shall be endorsed upon the said notice of abandonment, and the said notice so endorsed shall be filed among the records of the said Court; and if the said costs so allowed be not paid within ten days after such costs shall have been lawfully demanded, the amount thereof may be recovered from such last-mentioned overseers or guardians in the same manner as any penalties or forfeitures are recoverable under the said act passed in the session of Parliament holden in the fourth and fifth years of the reign of King William the Fourth.

9. That no appeal shall be allowed against any order of removal if notice of such appeal be not given as required by law, within the space of twenty-one days after the notice of chargeability and statement of the grounds of removal shall have been sent by the overseers or guardians of the removing parish to the overseers or guardians of the parish to which such order shall be directed, unless within such period of twenty-one days a copy of the depositions shall have been applied for as aforesaid by the last-mentioned overseers or guardians, in which case a further period of fourteen days after the sending of such copy shall be allowed for the giving of such notice of appeal; but in such case no poor person shall be removed under such order of removal until the expiration of such further period of fourteen days.

10. That all the provisions which relate to the sending and service of copies of orders of removal shall apply to such orders when suspended, and to all orders consequent upon such suspension, and to all copies of charges arising thereon, and demands of payment of such charges.

11. That the said act passed in the session of Parliament holden in the fourth and fifth years of the reign of his late Majesty King William the Fourth, intitled "An Act for the Amendment and better Administration of the Laws relating to the Poor in England and Wales," and all acts to amend and extend the same, and the present act, shall (except so far as the provisions of any former act are altered, amended, or repealed by any subsequent act), be construed as one act.

12. That this act shall commence and take effect on the first day of August one thousand eight hundred and forty-eight.

13. That this act may be amended or repealed by any act to be passed in this present session of Parliament.

LONDON, OCTOBER 7, 1848.

In a former Number *, we considered the effect of a judgment by default in rendering a defendant competent as a witness for or against his co-defendants. It was there shewn, that the stat. 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85, had not introduced any new rule with regard to the admissibility of the evidence of parties to the record, and that the question of its admissibility depended upon their interest in the result of the cause, not upon their being named as parties.

In the present article we propose to examine the competency of defendants as witnesses where their original position has been changed by a nolle prosequi having been entered or a separate verdict having been taken as to some of them.

The effect of a nolle prosequi in criminal proceedings and also in civil actions, whether ex contractu or ex delicto, is to render the defendant, as to whom it is entered, a competent witness for or against his co-defendants. (Affalo v. Fourdrinier, 6 Bing. 306; Emmet v. Butler, 7 Taunt. 607; Man v. Ward, 2 Atk. 228; P. v. Ellis, 1 Macnalley, Evid. 55). The nolle prosequi, as it appears, puts an end to the prosecution or action as far as such defendant is concerned, so that he cannot be considered a party to the record at the time of the trial.

In actions ex contractu, it is only in the case of a plea of personal discharge, as bankruptcy, discharge under an insolvent act, and ne uniques executor, that a nolle prosequi can be entered. Where these pleas are not pleaded in this form of action, and the plaintiff is desirous of dropping a defendant by the way, his only course is to discontinue and to commence a new action against the other defendants.

The nolle prosequi should be entered a reasonable time before the trial; and where the application for leave to enter it was made at Nisi Prius just before the jury were sworn, it was refused. (Spencer v. Harrison, 2 C. & K. 429, per Erle, J.).

The reason of allowing a separate verdict to be taken is thus stated by Gilbert, C. B., in his Treatise on Evidence, (p. 117):—"If any person be arbitrarily made a defendant to prevent his testimony in the cause, he (the plaintiff) shall not prevail by that artifice, but the defendant, against whom nothing is proved, shall be sworn notwithstanding. . . . But this rule must be understood where there is no manner of evidence against such defendant." Its effect, both in criminal and civil proceedings, is the same as that of a nolle prosequi, and renders the acquitted defendant a competent witness for or against the others. (See Hawknorth v. Showler, 12 Me. & W. 50; Bate v. Russell, M. & Mal. 382; Taylor on Evidence, vol. 2, p. 874).

It is, however, in the discretion of the judge, whether a separate verdict shall be taken or not; and it will be permitted only where it is clear that no failure of justice will result from such a step. (Sewell v. Champion, 6 Adel. & Ell. 415).

The application for it is generally made at the close of the plaintiff's case; but if there is a probability that the defendant, on whose behalf it is sought, may be affected by the evidence adduced for the defence, it will not be permitted until the conclusion of such evidence. (White v. Hill, 6 Q. B. Rep. 487). In a late case, where the parties, being sued in trespass, appeared by one attorney and pleaded jointly, the plaintiff, at the end of his opening case, applied for the acquittal of a defendant, so that he might be a witness for him; but the counsel for the defence stating that he appeared for the three, and objecting to the acquittal at that stage, the judge refused the application. (Spencer v. Harrison, 2 C. & K. 429).

* No. 606, ante, p. 321.

With regard to the words in Lord Denman's Act, of "parties individually named in the record," it may be here observed, that a prochein amy or guardian does not come within them, so as to exclude his evidence; (Sinclair v. Sindair, 13 Mee. & W. 640); nor do individual corporators, or inhabitants in actions by or against corporations aggregate, or the collective inhabitants of a district, (see Id., p. 645, per Parke, B.), although the two last-mentioned classes may come within the other exception of the act, as "persons in whose immediate and individual behalf the action is brought."

In the Leader of No. 610, p. 362, are two errata, viz. col. 1, line 31 from top, omit the word "not;" and col. 2, line 42 from top, for "name," read "cause."

Whereas an Act was passed in the 7 & 8 Vict. [c. 111], intitled "An Act for facilitating the winding up of the Affairs of Joint-stock Companies unable to meet their pecuniary Engagements;" And whereas another Act was passed in the 8 & 9 Vict. [c. 98], intitled "An Act for facilitating the winding up the Affairs of Joint-stock Companies in Ireland unable to meet their pecuniary Engagements;" And whereas an Act was passed in the 9 & 10 Vict. [c. 28], intitled "An Act to facilitate the Dissolution of certain Railway Companies," whereby it was enacted, as therein mentioned, amongst other things, that it should be lawful for such meeting as therein mentioned of the shareholders of any company in the said Act

mentioned to determine that any such company should be dissolved; and it was thereby further enacted, that, in addition to the question of dissolution, it should be imperative on the meeting to decide whether such dissolution should or should not be an act of bankruptcy, for the purpose of having the affairs of the company wound up, under the provisions of the act thereafter mentioned, but that such provision should not extend to the case of railways to be made in Scotland; and it was thereby further enacted, that it should be lawful for any three of those who were on the committee (as therein defined) of any company so dissolved, at any time after the dissolution thereof should have been resolved, or for any creditor or creditors of such company to such amount as was then by law requisite to support a fiat in bankruptcy in England and Ireland or a sequestration in Scotland, within three months after the dissolution thereof should have been resolved, to petition that a fiat in bankruptcy might issue against such company if in England or Ireland, or that the estates of the company might be sequestrated if in Scotland; and it was thereby further enacted, that upon the production of a copy of the London Gazette containing the resolution of any such meeting as theretofore mentioned, whereby it should be resolved that the dissolution of the company should be an act of bankruptcy, or upon the petition of any three of the committee as aforesaid, or of any creditor under the last therein proceeding (and herein-before recited) clause, a fiat in bankruptcy should issue against such company by the registered name or style of such company, and the company should thereupon be deemed to be within the provisions of the said act for facilitating the winding up of joint-stock companies unable to meet their pecuniary engagements, and of the said act for facilitating the winding up of joint-stock companies in Ireland unable to meet their pecuniary engagements, in all respects as if a fiat had issued against it under the said act before its dissolution, but such last provision was not to extend to Scotland: And whereas it is expedient that the said two first-mentioned acts should be amended, and that further facilities should be given for the dissolution and winding up of joint-stock companies and other partnerships: be it therefore enacted, &c., that this act shall apply to all companies, corporate or unincorporate, within the provisions of either of the two acts first herein-before mentioned, (including all companies existing on the 1st day of November, 1844, and which shall have obtained or shall obtain a certificate of registration under an act passed in the 7 & 8 Vict. [c. 110], intitled "An Act for the Registration, Incorporation, and Regulation of Joint-stock Companies"), and to all companies which would have been within the provisions of either of the said two acts if they had not been dissolved or had not ceased to trade at the time of the passing thereof respectively, and to all banking companies which would have been within the provisions thereof if they had not been specially excepted from the provisions of an act passed in the 7 & 8 Vict. [c. 110], intitled "An Act for the Registration, Incorporation, and Regulation of Joint-stock Companies," and to all companies which under the provisions of the said act to facilitate the dissolution of certain railway companies shall before the 1st day of March, 1848, have become bankrupt, and to all companies, associations, and partnerships to be formed after the passing of this act whereby the capital or the profits is or are divided or to be divided into shares and such shares transferable without the express consent of all the copartners.

2. That all associations or companies formed for the purposes of working mines or minerals, and all benefit building societies other than such as are duly certified and inrolled under the statutes in force respecting such societies, shall be liable to the operation of this act: Provided nevertheless, that nothing herein contained shall affect the jurisdiction of the Court of Stannaries in Cornwall.

4. That in citing this act in other acts of Parliament, and in legal instruments and in legal proceedings, it shall be sufficient to use the expression "The Joint-stock Companies Winding-up Act, 1848."

5. That it shall be lawful for any person who shall be or claim to be a contributory of a company to present a petition to the Lord Chancellor or to the Master of the Rolls in a summary way for the dissolution and winding up or for the winding up of the affairs of such company, in any of the following cases; (that is to say),

1. If any company shall have committed, done, or suffered any act which according to the provisions of the said recited acts or of any of them would be deemed to be an act of bankruptcy on the part of such company:

2. If any company shall, by virtue of a resolution to be passed in that behalf at a meeting of such company, or of the directors of such company, summoned in that behalf, have filed or caused to be filed in the office of the Lord Chancellor's Secretary of Bankrupts a declaration in writing that the said company is unable to meet its engagements:

3. If any person shall have recovered judgment in any action personal for the recovery of any debt or demand in any of her Majesty's courts of record against any such company, or against any person authorised to be sued as the nominal defendant on behalf of such company, or against any one or more of the members or contributories of such company acting or sued in the name or on the behalf of the other members or contributories thereof, and shall be in a situation to sue out execution upon such judgment, and such execution shall not be restrained or suspended by any rule, order, or proceeding of any court of justice, and there shall be nothing due from the plaintiff by way of set-off, or which may be legally set off against such judgment, and if within ten days after notice in writing served upon the said company by service of the same upon a chief clerk or secretary or registrar of the said company, or if there be no officer of such denomination, then either on any director of the said company personally or by the same having been left at the head or only office for the time being of such company, requiring immediate payment or discharge of such judgment-debt, such company shall not have paid, secured, or compounded for the same :

4. If any decree or order shall have been pronounced in any cause depending in any court of equity, or any order made in any matter of bankruptcy or lunacy, against any such company, or against any person duly authorised to be sued as the nominal defendant on behalf of such company, or against any one or more of the members or contributories of such company acting or sued in the name or on the behalf of the other members or contributories thereof, ordering any sum of money to be paid by such company, and such company shall not have paid the same at the time when the same ought, according to the exigency of such decree or order, to be paid :
5. If any action shall have been brought in any of her Majesty's courts of record against any contributory of a company for any debt or demand which shall be due or claimed to be due from or by such company, and such company shall not, within ten days after notice in writing by such contributory of such action shall have been served upon the company in manner hereinbefore directed with respect to any judgment-debt, have paid, secured, or compounded for such debt or demand, or have otherwise procured such action to be stayed, or shall not have indemnified the defendant to his satisfaction against such action, and all costs, damages, and expenses to be incurred by him by reason of the same :
6. If any creditor of a company to such amount as is now by law requisite to support a fiat shall have filed an affidavit in any of her Majesty's superior courts of law at Westminster or Dublin, that such debt is justly due to him from the said company, and shall have sued out of the same court a writ of summons or other writ against such company, or against any person duly authorised to be sued as the nominal defendant on behalf of such company, or against any one or more of the members or contributories of such company in the name or on behalf of the other members or contributories thereof, and shall have given notice of the same in manner hereinbefore directed with respect to any judgment-debt, and such company shall not within three weeks after service of such notice have paid, secured, or compounded for such debt to the satisfaction of such creditor, or have made it appear to the satisfaction of one of the judges of the court out of which such writ shall have issued that it is the intention of such company to defend the action upon the merits, and shall not within three weeks next after service of such notice have caused an appearance to be entered to such action in the proper court in which the same shall have been brought :
7. If any company shall have been dissolved, or shall have ceased to carry on business, or shall be carrying on business only for the purpose of winding up its affairs, and the same shall not be completely wound up :
8. Or if any other matter or thing shall be shown which in the opinion of the Court shall render it just and equitable that the company should be dissolved.
6. That in case any fiat shall have been issued against any company under the provisions of the said recited acts or any of them, no petition shall be presented for the dissolution and winding up or for the winding up of such company under this act by any other person than by the creditors' assignees of the estate and effects of any such company, who shall have power, by the order and direction of the Court of Bankruptcy (but not otherwise), to present a petition to the Lord Chancellor or to the Master of the Rolls in England or Ireland, as the case may be, for the winding up of such company under this act, and it shall be a sufficient ground for such petition that such order has been made by the Court of Bankruptcy ; and that upon an order for the winding up of such company being pronounced by the Court of Chancery the Court of Bankruptcy shall cause to be made upon the proceedings under the fiat a memorandum of such order as aforesaid of the Court of Bankruptcy, and shall order that the said proceedings shall be and the same shall accordingly be deposited with the Master to whom the matter shall be referred by the Court of Chancery under this act : Provided nevertheless, that it shall be lawful for the Master to dispense with such deposit, and to make order concerning its custody and production of such proceedings.

7. That all proceedings had, accounts taken, and other matters done in the prosecution of any fiat, before any order absolute under this act, shall, for the purposes of any winding up under this act, be as valid and conclusive as the same would have been valid and conclusive under the said act, and any pending proceedings, accounts, and matters under any such fiat may be proceeded with and concluded under this act.

8. That every petition and proceeding under this act shall be intitled "In the Matter of the Joint-stock Companies Winding-up Act, 1848," and in the matter of the company to which such petition or proceeding shall relate, describing such company by its most usual style or firm, until any order absolute under this act, and after any such order then by the style or firm by which such company shall have been designated in such order absolute.

9. That no order absolute, nor any order or proceeding under this act, shall be impeached by reason of the petitioner or any of the petitioners being afterwards discovered not to have been duly qualified to present the petition on which the order absolute shall have been made ; provided that a petition may be presented under this act by some person duly qualified, praying to have the benefit of the former proceedings, and to be allowed to carry on and prosecute the same ; and upon such petition being presented, and coming on to be heard, such order shall be made as to the Court shall seem necessary and proper, empowering and directing that the former proceedings shall be carried on and prosecuted by the petitioner.

10. That every petition for dissolution and winding up or for winding up the affairs of any company under this act shall be advertised once in the London Gazette, and shall be served, at the head or only office of the company, upon any member, officer, or servant of the company there, or in case no such member, officer, or servant can be found there, then by being left at such office, or in case no office of the company can be found, then upon any member, officer, or servant of the company : Provided always, that no such petition presented by the direction of the Court of Bankruptcy, nor any order thereon, shall require advertisement under this act ; provided also, that in case no office of the company, nor any member, officer, or servant thereof, can be found, the Court may proceed to hear and to make any order on any petition for dissolution and winding up or for winding up, on production of the number of the London Gazette containing such advertisement (if any) as aforesaid, and without proof that such petition has been served in manner aforesaid.

11. That it shall be lawful for the Court at the hearing to direct any such petition, whether the same shall have been served as aforesaid or not, to stand over, and to direct such service or such further service of the petition as to the Court shall seem meet.

12. That on the hearing of any such petition it shall be lawful for the Court, if it shall not think fit in the first instance to make an order absolute, to require any parties to show cause, within such time as the Court shall think fit, why the company should not be dissolved and wound up or wound up under this act, or to make an order for the dissolution and winding up or for the winding up of such company, conditional on the nonfulfilment of such terms and by such parties as the Court shall think fit, or to refer it to the Master to make preliminary inquiries as to the necessity or expediency of the dissolution and winding up or of the winding up of such company ; and it shall be lawful for the Court, in case no sufficient cause be shown, or in case the terms of any such conditional order be not fulfilled, or in case it shall appear from the Master's report, upon such reference as aforesaid, that the dissolution and winding up or the winding up of any such company under this act is necessary or expedient, to make such order absolute as hereafter mentioned.

13. That it shall be lawful for the Court, if it shall think it practicable and expedient, before or in making any order absolute, to direct the application or performance, either wholly or in part, and by such parties as it shall think proper, of any provisions contained in or supplied by the constitution of the company towards the purposes of such dissolution or winding up, or towards considering or ascertaining the necessity or expediency of such dissolution or winding up.

14. That it shall be lawful for the Court, on the hearing of any petition for dissolution and winding up, or for winding up, either originally or subsequently, or on further directions, to dismiss such petition with or without costs, or to make an order absolute for the dissolution and winding up or for the winding up of the company, under the provisions of this act, with or without such special directions as the Court shall think fit, and by such order it shall be referred to one of the Masters of the Court to wind up the affairs of the company accordingly under the provisions of this act.

15. That the date, title, and ordering part of every order of the Court made upon any such petition, previously to and including the order absolute, shall, within twelve days after the date thereof, be advertised once in the London Gazette, and shall be served in such manner and upon such persons as the Court shall direct.

16. That from the date of any order absolute for dissolution, or from any date to be therein fixed for that purpose, the company therein specified shall be absolutely dissolved.

17. That the petitioner on whose petition an order absolute shall be obtained shall without delay carry in the same before the Master; and in default of his so doing by the space of ten days next after the date of such order it shall be lawful for any person being or claiming to be a contributory to present his petition to the Court in the same matter, praying to have the carriage and prosecution of the said order absolute, and thereupon such order shall be made and directions given, as well with respect to the costs of the application or otherwise, as to the Court shall appear just; and it shall be sufficient to serve such last-mentioned petition in the usual manner, either upon the petitioner who obtained the order absolute, or upon his solicitor by whom such order was obtained.

18. That it shall be lawful for the Court, in any decree or order for the dissolution of a company, or of any other association or partnership (whether included in the definition herein contained of a company or not), to be made in any suit now pending or hereafter to be instituted, and also by any order to be made after a decree for the dissolution of a company, association, or partnership in any such suit, to order that the affairs of such company, association, or partnership shall be wound up under the provisions of this act, and that the costs of winding up the same shall be paid and recovered according to the provisions of this act, and for that purpose to give such directions as the Court shall deem necessary or expedient in that behalf; and any decree or order so to be made shall, if the Court shall so direct, be deemed an order absolute under this act.

19. That from and after the date of any order absolute it shall not be lawful for the directors, members, or officers of the company in respect of which such order absolute shall have been made to convey, assign, pay, or otherwise dispose of any of the property, monies, or other effects of the company, otherwise than by the direction of the Master.

20. That in the meantime and until an official manager shall be appointed, as hereinafter mentioned, and from time to time when there shall be no official manager, it shall be lawful for the Master, in any case in which he shall deem it necessary or expedient so to do, immediately upon the order absolute being brought in before him, to appoint by writing under his hand some person to be the interim or provisional manager of the property, assets, and effects of the company to which such order absolute shall relate, or of such part or parts thereof as the Master shall think fit; and the person to be so appointed shall thereupon have and exercise all such and the like powers and authorities as are usually given to and are had and exercised by receivers appointed by the Court in a suit duly instituted, together with all such powers and authorities as might be had and exercised by any official manager to be appointed under this act, except so far as the Master shall otherwise direct in any particular case; and the person so to be appointed interim or provisional manager shall act in all things under the direction of the Master, in collecting and receiving and afterwards disposing of the property, estate, and effects of such company, or such parts thereof as in order to the preservation and security thereof shall require to be so collected and received; and it shall be lawful for such interim or provisional manager acting in that behalf under the direction of the Master, to be signified by writing under his hand, to pay and apply any part of the monies, assets, and effects to be collected, received, or got in by him in or towards the discharge or satisfaction of any judgment-debt which shall have been recovered against such company; and it shall be lawful for the Master to fix the amount and nature of the security to be given and entered into by such interim or provisional manager, and also (if the Master shall think fit) to appoint any person to be interim or provisional manager without giving or entering into any security, and the security, if any, to be so fixed by the Master, shall accordingly be given and entered into by such interim or provisional manager: Provided nevertheless, that upon the appointment of an official manager of such company under this act all the powers and authorities of such interim or provisional manager shall cease, and the person who shall have been such interim or provisional manager shall thereupon deliver up and pay to the official manager all the goods, monies, property, and effects of such company which shall have come to his hands as such interim or provisional manager as aforesaid, together with all books, papers, and writings in his possession, custody, or power relating thereto, or to the affairs of such company; and it shall be lawful for the Master to make an order, if need be, directing such delivery and payment accordingly, and for vacating any recognisance entered into by such interim or provisional manager and his surety or sureties (if any): Provided also, that no action, suit, or other proceeding shall be instituted or prosecuted by or against any interim or provisional manager to be appointed as herein mentioned, as representing the company, otherwise than by the style and designation of the official manager of the company; and that every such action, suit, or other proceeding shall be instituted and prosecuted in the same manner and with the same effect, to all intents and purposes, as if an official manager of the company had been already appointed, and were a party to such action, suit, or other proceeding, in the place of such interim or provisional manager, nor shall the same abate by reason of the appointment of an official manager, but the same shall be carried on by or against him, as the case may be.

21. That upon any order absolute being carried in before the Master, or upon the death, removal, or resignation of any official manager to be appointed as herein mentioned, the Master shall forthwith direct that an advertisement be inserted, by the party having the prosecution or carriage of the order, in two successive numbers of the London Gazette, and also in such two or more newspapers as the Master shall appoint, giving notice that the Master will proceed, at a day, hour, and place to be stated in such advertisement, such day to be within fourteen days from the publication of the first advertisement, to appoint an official manager or managers of the company under this act, either originally or in the room of any official manager who shall have died or resigned or shall have been removed; and previously to the making out and settling of such list of contributories as hereinafter mentioned all persons being or claiming to be contributories of such company, and after the making out and settling of such list of contributories all persons appearing on such lists as contributories of such company, shall be entitled to attend at such time and place, and to offer proposals or objections as to any such appointment; and it shall be lawful for the Master, if he shall think fit, to adjourn the appointment of any official manager to another time and place, to be stated and made known to the parties present at the time and place originally fixed for making such appointment: Provided always, that it shall not be requisite to give notice of any such adjournment by advertisement.

22. That at the time and place to be fixed in such advertisement, or at any other time or place to which the appointment of an official manager shall have been adjourned, the Master shall, by writing under his hand, appoint a person or persons to be the official manager or managers of the company, either originally or in the stead of any official manager who shall be removed, or die, or resign his office; and the Master shall have power from time to time, at his discretion, but subject to any special direction of the Court, to remove, by writing under his hand, any such official manager, and upon such removal, and also upon the death or resignation of any official manager, to appoint in manner aforesaid any other person to be official manager in the stead of any such manager who shall be removed, or die, or resign his office; and such official manager may be either any contributory of any company, or the assignee in bankruptcy of any company, being bankrupt, or of any bankrupt member or contributory of the same.

23. That in making the first or any subsequent appointment of an official manager it shall be lawful for the Master to adopt the proposal of any of the parties attending him in the matter of such appointment; and in making such appointment the proposal of any of the parties who shall have appeared before the Court shall not be entitled on that account to any preference; and it shall also be lawful for the Master, if he shall think fit, to act independently of any proposal, and to appoint any person whom he shall think proper to nominate as official manager, although such person shall not have been proposed by any of the parties.

24. That upon the appointment of any official manager, or within such subsequent period as the Master may from time to time or at any time direct, the person who shall have been so appointed official manager, and two or more persons as his sureties, to be approved of by the Master, shall enter into a recognisance or recognisances in such form as in the schedule hereto is set forth, or otherwise as the Court by any general order in that behalf, or by any special order in the matter, shall direct, and in such sum as the Master shall direct (but not to exceed by more than one thousand pounds the greatest sum or value which in the judgment of the Master the official manager shall have or shall be likely to have at any one time in his hands), for the duly accounting by the official manager for all monies, estate, and effects which shall come to his hands in the winding up of the company of which he shall be so appointed official manager; and the recognisance of the official manager shall be for the whole amount of the sum to be so fixed by the Master, and the recognisances of the sureties of any official manager shall be either joint or several for the whole or any portion of the sum in which the official manager shall have become bound, but so as that the total amount of the recognisances of all such sureties shall not be less than the sum in which the official manager shall have become bound; and upon the death, bankruptcy, or insolvency of any surety, it shall be lawful for the Master to require recognisances to be entered into by any new surety in the place of the surety so deceased or becomes bankrupt or insolvent; and it shall be lawful for the Master from time to time to require additional recognisances to be entered into by the official manager and his sureties, or by any new sureties, in such further sum or sums as the Master shall think fit; and upon the breach or nonfulfilment of the condition or defeasance of any such recognisances as aforesaid, the same shall or may, under an order of the Master, be put in force by the official manager, or by any contributory of the company, in like manner as the recognisances of receivers of the Court of Chancery appointed in a suit duly instituted are in the like cases put in force; and it shall be lawful for the Master, after any person shall have ceased to be official manager, and his final account shall have been passed, and any balance due thereon paid, to order the recognisance entered into by such official manager and his sureties to be vacated.

25. That, notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, in case default shall be made by the official manager at any time in accounting for what he shall receive as such official manager, or in paying the same as the Master shall direct, it shall be lawful for the Master, by order to be made by him, to order and require the official manager and his sureties, or any of them, to pay to such person; and within such time as the Master shall appoint, the whole or any portion of the sum in which the official manager and his sureties respectively shall have become bound by recognisance: Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to extend the liability of any surety beyond the sum in which such surety became individually bound on his recognisance.

26. Provided always, that, notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, it shall be lawful for the Master, if he shall think fit, to accept the security of any guarantee society established by charter or act of Parliament in any part of Great Britain, in lieu of the security of each two or more sureties as aforesaid, or of any of them.

27. That every appointment and every removal of an official manager shall be valid and effectual to all intents without confirmation by the Court, unless it shall be otherwise ordered by the Court in the particular matter; and every such appointment, and also every removal of an official manager, shall be advertised in the London Gazette; and in such newspapers as the Master shall from time to time think proper.

28. That immediately after the appointment of an official manager the Master shall, by order, direct that all the books of account, deeds, instruments, cash, bills, notes, papers, and writings of and belonging to the company shall, within a time to be limited in that behalf, be delivered up, and the same shall accordingly be delivered up, by every person in whose custody, possession, or power the same may be, to the official manager, and shall be kept by him, and upon and immediately after the appointment of any new official manager all the same matters shall be in like manner ordered to be and shall accordingly be delivered over to him: Provided nevertheless, that it shall be lawful for the Master from time to time and at any time to make such order as he shall think fit relative to the custody or deposit, either absolutely or only for a time, of such books of account, deeds, instruments, bills, notes, papers, and writings, or any of them.

29. That on every such appointment of an official manager all the estate, effects, and credits, and rights of action of the company, and all powers in and about the same which by this act or otherwise might be exercised by an official manager, shall, except so far as the Master shall, by writing under his hand, direct to the contrary, become by virtue of the appointment absolutely vested in the official manager so appointed, either solely, or jointly with any other official manager for the time being, as joint tenants; and when, according to any laws now in force, any conveyance or assignment of any real or personal property which may become vested in any official manager under this act would require to be registered, enrolled, or recorded in any registry office, court, or place in England, Wales, or Ireland, or in any registry office, court, or place in Scotland, or any of the dominions, plantations, or colonies belonging to her Majesty, then the order absolute, together with the first appointment of an official manager, shall be registered in the registry office, court, or place wherein such conveyance or assignment as last aforesaid would require to be registered, enrolled, or recorded; and the registry hereby directed shall have the like effect to all intents and purposes as the registry, enrolment, or recording of any such conveyance or assignment as last aforesaid would have had; and the title of any purchaser of any such property as last aforesaid for valuable consideration, or of any mortgagee thereof without fraud, who shall have duly registered, enrolled, or recorded his purchase or mortgage deed previously to the registry hereby directed, shall not be invalidated by reason of such order absolute or appointment: Provided always, that if the Master shall, by writing under his hand, direct that any of the said estate, effects, credits, or rights of action shall not vest in the official manager by virtue of the appointment, it shall be lawful for the Court or the Master at any time afterwards by order to revoke, discharge, or vary any such direction, and thereupon the estate, effects, credits, or rights of action comprised in such direction shall, either wholly or to the extent to which the same shall be so discharged or varied, become and be vested in the official manager for the time being.

30. That when any order shall have been made in hereinbefore mentioned on petition, by direction of the Court of Bankruptcy, for winding up under this act the affairs of any company, all such estate and effects, rights and credits of the bankrupt company as shall for the time being be vested in the assignees in bankruptcy shall, upon and by virtue of the appointment of an official manager under this act, unless otherwise provided by the order absolute, become absolutely vested in such official manager; together with all such powers in and about the same as an official manager might exercise in any matter originally instituted under this act in which the company had not become bankrupt.

31. That until the issuing of any such general rules or orders as are by this act authorised to be made the practice of the Court with respect to receivers and managers of partnership estates shall, so far as practicable, and subject to the provisions of this act, and to any special orders or directions relative to the official manager, and his duties and proceedings, to be made or given by the Court, the Master with respect to any particular company, (and which order or directions the Court and the Master are hereby respectively authorised to make and give), apply to every official manager under this act, and to his duties and proceedings.

32. That it shall be lawful for the Court to allow such any remuneration, by way of percentage or otherwise, as it shall think proper, to the official manager, and also to any receiver to be appointed as hereinbefore provided, and to increase or diminish such salary or remuneration from time to time, and that whether the official manager or the receiver shall or shall not be a member of the dissolved company.

33. That it shall be lawful for the official manager, with the approbation of the Master, to employ and from time to time dismiss an attorney or solicitor.

34. That the official manager shall proceed with all convenient speed, under the directions of the Master, in the making up, continuing, completing, and rectifying the books of account of the company, and in providing and keeping such other books of account (if any) as shall be necessary for the shewing the debts and credits of the company, including a ledger, which shall contain the separate accounts of the contributories (and in which every contributory shall be debited from time to time with the amount payable by him in respect of any call to be made as hereby provided), and in balancing all such books and the accounts of the respective contributors of such company, getting in, selling, and converting the estate and assets and winding up the business and affairs of the same company, in paying the debts as herein provided, and in dividing and distributing the surplus assets of the company (whether existing at the time of the dissolution, or arising from subsequent calls or contributions, or otherwise, amongst the parties entitled), and in bringing before the Master for determination and settlement all questions necessary to be determined and settled in order to the winding up of the affairs of the company; and the official manager, with or without notice to any contributory, shall, without the necessity of any proposal in writing, take the directions of the Master from time to time with reference to all proceedings necessary to be done or taken in order to the complete and effectual winding up of the affairs of the company; and it shall be lawful for the Master to give such directions accordingly.

35. That the accounts of the official manager and receiver, any, shall from time to time be passed before the Master, and entered in such manner as he shall direct; and that the contributories shall only be at liberty to surcharge and falsify such accounts.

36. That the official manager shall make, in books to be from time to time provided by him for that purpose, true and faithful entries or minutes of all matters, acts, and proceedings done and taken, as well before the Master as otherwise, in and out the winding up of the affairs of the company; and such books shall be kept in the custody of the official manager, and shall on all occasions on which the Master is required to proceed in the matter of such company be produced before the Master.

37. That upon any order absolute being brought before the Master for his consideration he shall, immediately after directing the insertion of the advertisement hereinbefore directed relative to the intended appointment of an official manager, and afterwards from time to time, determine what parties shall attend him in the proceedings to be had before him under such order absolute, or upon or with reference to any particular set of such proceedings; and it shall be lawful for the Master, at any subsequent stage of the proceedings, to direct any other parties, being contributories, to attend him in the further prosecution of the matter, or on such of the further proceedings therein as he shall direct; and in particular it shall be lawful for the Master from time to time, with the consent of the majority, both as to number and extent of interest, of the persons to be represented in any particular case, such consent to be notified by some writing under the hands of the parties or their solicitors, to appoint and again remove any one or more contributories to attend and watch the proceedings of the liquidation before him, or any particular part of such proceedings, as representatives on behalf of the contributories in general, or of his contributories or classes of contributories as the Master shall direct; and all parties who shall be determined to be the proper parties to attend the Master as aforesaid shall in manner hereinafter mentioned be served with notice of all proceedings before the Master, or with notice of such of them as such parties respectively shall be directed to attend or watch; and the costs and charges to be thereby properly incurred by all such parties respectively, except so far as the Master shall otherwise direct, shall be deemed to be part of the general costs winding up the company under this act.

38. That all persons whose names shall stand in the list of contributories shall be entitled to require, and, at their own expense, to receive notice, as the Master shall direct, of all or any of the proceedings in the matter of the dissolved company, and also shall be entitled, at their own expense, either personally or by solicitor or agent, to attend the proceedings; and it shall be lawful for any such contributory, at his own expense, to submit any proposal before the Master, in writing, or otherwise as the Master may direct, in relation to the affairs of such company and the winding up the same.

39. That if any contributory shall be an idiot or lunatic, such idiot or lunatic shall be entitled to attend, and in all proceedings under this act shall be sufficiently represented by his committee; and if any contributory shall be a minor, such minor shall be entitled to attend, and in all proceedings under this act shall be sufficiently represented by his father or guardian, or if he shall have no father or guardian, by his mother, or otherwise by a next friend to be appointed by the Master: Provided always, that it shall be lawful for the Master, in any case in which he shall think fit so to do, by any order under his hand, to appoint any person to be the guardian of any contributory being a minor, or to be the representative of any contributory being a lunatic, but not found so by commission, for the purposes of any winding up under this act.

40. That every party who shall attend the proceedings or any of the proceedings before the Master under this act shall cause to be stated to the Master whether he intends to appear in person or by solicitor, and if in person he shall cause to be stated his own name and address, and if by solicitor the name and address of his solicitor, and also upon any change of solicitor the name and address of the new solicitor, and such name and address of the party or solicitor, as the case may be, shall be entered in the Master's book of proceedings; and notice of all proceedings before the Master or before the Court, to notice of which the party respectively is entitled, shall be sufficiently given by service thereof upon the party or upon his solicitor, as the case may be.

41. That if the proceedings before the Master under any order absolute, not being proceedings proper to be taken by the official manager, shall not be prosecuted by the petitioner under this act, or other the person having the prosecution thereof, with due diligence, or if for any other reason it shall appear advisable, it shall be lawful for the Master, upon the application in that behalf of any contributory, to commit to him the further prosecution thereof; and if any official manager, as to matters and proceedings which ought to be prosecuted by the official manager, shall not prosecute the same with due diligence, it shall be lawful for any contributory to apply to the Master concerning the same, and thereupon the Master shall give such directions as he shall deem necessary, and shall remove, if he shall think fit, such official manager.

42. That after any order shall have been made on any petition under this act, the death of the petitioner or party, or of any or all of the petitioners or parties, if more than one, for the time being acting in any proceeding under this act, shall not abate the proceeding; but in any such case it shall be lawful for the Court, and also for the Master, after an order absolute shall have been brought in before him, subject to any special order of the Court, upon the application of any party interested, (such application to be supported by evidence, and if made to the Court to be made by way of motion), to order and direct that the further prosecution of the proceedings, or of the particular proceeding, or the defence thereto, as the case may be, shall be committed to the party making such application, or to such other party interested as the Master shall think proper; and the costs of all such applications, and also the costs of the deceased petitioner or party, shall, if the Court or the Master shall so direct, be deemed to be part of the general costs of winding up the company under this act.

43. That all proceedings before the Master under this act shall be commenced and proceeded in, not by state of facts and proposal, but by proposal or counter proposal in writing, or in such way as the Master shall direct, to be supported, if need be, by evidence: Provided nevertheless, that where, owing to the nature of the subject, the Master shall deem it expedient to direct the parties before him to proceed by a state of facts in writing, it shall be lawful for him to give such direction by writing under his hand.

44. That it shall be lawful for the Master, in any matter referred to him under this act, to dispense with any warrants to consider the order of reference to him under this act, and such other warrants in the course of proceeding under such order as he shall see fit, and also to direct from time to time any warrants to be taken out and prosecuted before him by the official manager or any other person attending the proceedings before him, and also to fix the time at which any warrant shall be returnable before him, or at which any proceeding necessary to be taken shall be taken, and also to proceed de die in diem.

45. That the Master shall have power from time to time, with or without further notice to any party, to adjourn any proceedings before him under this act, although by this act or otherwise directed to be taken at any specified time or place, either de die in diem, or to any other time and place to be then and there fixed by the Master in that behalf, and so from time to time, and that all matters done at any such adjourned time and place shall be of the same force and effect as if the same had been done at the time and place (if any) originally specified.

46. That it shall be lawful for the Master, at his discretion, to order the advertisement in the London Gazette or otherwise, or the service on any person, in such manner as he shall think fit, of any order or proceeding in and about the winding up of the affairs of any company under this act.

47. That the Master shall, on request of any party interested, give certificates under his hand of any decisions, entries, or other matters which shall be made, done, or transacted in and about the winding up of any company under this act.

48. That, subject to the control of the Master, all contributories shall be entitled, without fee or reward, to inspect all or any of the books of the company, or of the official manager or receiver, if any, and to take copies or abstracts of, or extracts from, all or any of such books, or any part thereof.

49. That, as between the contributories, the books, accounts, and documents of the company, until the order absolute, and of the official manager or any such receiver as aforesaid after such order, shall be prima facie evidence of the truth of all matters therein contained, and purporting to be therein recorded.

50. That after the appointment of any official manager under this act all actions, suits, and other proceedings, at law or in equity, which might have been commenced, instituted, or prosecuted by or on behalf of the company with respect to which such appointment shall be made against any persons, whether contributories of the company or not, shall be commenced or instituted and prosecuted by the official manager by the style and designation of "the official manager" of such company, (describing it under the style or firm by which it is described in the order absolute), as the nominal plaintiff or petitioner, for and on behalf of such company, and that whether there be one or more official manager or managers, and that all debts which might have been proved by or on behalf of the company against the estate of any bankrupt or insolvent debtor to the company shall and may be proved against such estate by the official manager of such company by the style and designation aforesaid, and that all actions, suits, and proceedings, at law or in equity, to be commenced or instituted by any persons, whether contributories of such company or otherwise, against such company, or any person duly authorised to be sued as the nominal defendant on behalf of the same, shall and lawfully may be commenced, instituted, and prosecuted against the official manager of such company, (by such style and designation as aforesaid), as the nominal defendant for and on behalf of such company, and that whether there be one or more such official manager or managers.

51. That all indictments, informations, and prosecutions by or on behalf of such company, for any stealing or embezzlement of any money, goods, effects, bills, notes, securities, or other property of or belonging to such company, or for any fraud, forgery, crime, or offence committed against or with intent to injure or defraud such company or the property thereof, whether such stealing or embezzlement, fraud, forgery, crime, or offence shall have taken place before or after the first appointment of the official manager under this act, shall and lawfully may be had, preferred, and carried on by the official manager of such company by the style and designation aforesaid; and that in all such indictments and informations to be had or preferred by or on behalf of such company by the official manager as aforesaid, against any person whomsoever, notwithstanding such person may be a contributory of such company, it shall be lawful and sufficient to state the money, goods, effects, bills, notes, securities, or other property of such company to be the money, goods, effects, bills, notes, securities, or other property of the official manager of such company, by such style and designation as aforesaid; and that any forgery, fraud, crime, or other offence committed against or with intent to injure or defraud any such company shall in such indictment, notwithstanding as aforesaid, be laid or stated to have been committed against or with intent to injure or defraud the official manager of such company, (by such style and designation as aforesaid), whether there be one or more official manager or managers for the time being; and any offender may thereupon be lawfully convicted for any such forgery, fraud, crime, or offence; and that in all other allegations, indictments, informations, or other proceedings of any kind whatsoever, in which it otherwise might have been necessary to state the names of the persons composing such company, it shall be sufficient to state the style and designation of the official manager of such company.

52. That where any action, suit, or other proceeding shall be pending against the company in respect of which such official manager shall have been appointed, or against any person authorised to be sued as the nominal defendant on behalf of such company, it shall be lawful for the plaintiff in such action, suit, or other proceeding to substitute the official manager of such company, by such style or designation as hereinbefore mentioned, as the defendant in such action, suit, or other proceeding, by entering a suggestion on the roll to that effect in such action, and by obtaining an order to that effect in such suit, such order to be obtained on motion or petition, without notice, and that it shall be lawful for the plaintiff in such action, suit, or other proceeding to prosecute the same thenceforward against the official manager, in the same manner, and with the same effect, to all intents and purposes, and to have the same benefit of any order, decree, judgment, or other proceeding previously made, obtained, and had, as if such action, suit, or proceeding had been commenced against the official manager as defendant under the provisions of this act.

53. That where any action, suit, or other proceeding shall have been brought or instituted and shall be pending by or on behalf of the company in respect of which such official manager shall have been appointed, or by any person duly authorised to sue as the nominal plaintiff on behalf of such company, or by any one or more of the members or contributories of such company acting or suing in the name or on the behalf of himself and the other members or contributories thereof, as the plaintiff or plaintiffs, against any person, it shall be lawful for such plaintiffs to substitute the official manager of the company, by such style or designation as hereinbefore mentioned, as the plaintiff in such action, suit, or other proceeding, by entering a suggestion on the roll to that effect in such action, and by obtaining an order to that effect in such suit, such order to be obtained on motion or petition without notice, and that it shall be lawful for the official manager thenceforward to prosecute such action, suit, or other proceeding in the same manner, and with the same effect, to all intents and purposes, as if such action, suit, or proceeding had been commenced by the official manager as plaintiff under the provisions of this act.

54. That the death, resignation, or removal of the official manager of any company shall not abate or prejudice any action, suit, indictment, prosecution, or other proceeding commenced or prosecuted under this act.

55. That it shall be lawful for the official manager, under the direction of the Master, to compound or compromise any right or title, claim or demand, which the company may have or be entitled to against any person whomsoever, and also any claim or demand to which the company may be subject or liable, and also to compromise any action or suit which may be brought or prosecuted by or against the official manager on behalf of the company, and also to submit to arbitration any dispute or difference affecting the estate, rights, debts, credits or liabilities of the company, and upon any award made to perform, execute, and give effect to the same.

56. That all orders and decrees made or pronounced in any suit or proceeding in any court of equity against the official manager of any company shall have the like effect and operation upon and against the property of such company, and upon and against the persons and property of every contributory thereof, as if the same had been made and pronounced against the company, or any person duly authorised to be sued as the nominal defendant on behalf of the same, or (as the case may be) as if every contributory of such company were actually efore the Court as a party to such suit or proceeding; and it shall be lawful for the Court by which any such decree or order shall have been made or pronounced to direct, by the same or any subsequent order, subject nevertheless to such terms, if any, as the Court shall think fit to impose, that any such decree or order made or pronounced against any such official manager as aforesaid be enforced against every contributory of such company, or against any particular class or classes of contributories, to the extent of their legal or equitable liabilities, and thereupon and upon an order for that purpose to be obtained upon motion to be made ex parte, but in open court, such decree or order shall, after seven days' notice to the particular person or persons sought to be charged, be enforced and executed accordingly.

57. That all judgments which shall be entered up in any action at law against the official manager of any such company shall have the like effect and operation upon and against the property of such company, and upon and against the persons and property of the contributories thereof, and shall be enforced in like manner, as if such judgments had been entered up against such company, or against any person duly authorized to be sued on behalf of the same.

58. Provided always, That, except as is by this act expressly provided, nothing in this act contained, nor any petition or order under the same for the dissolution and winding up or for the winding up of any company, shall extend or enlarge, diminish, prejudice, or in anywise alter or affect the rights or remedies of creditors, or other persons not being contributories of the company, or the rights or remedies of creditors being also contributories, but being creditors of the company upon a distinct and independent account, whether against the company or against any of the contributories of the same, nor the rights or remedies of the company against any contributories or other persons, nor shall alter or affect any contracts or engagements entered into by or with the company, or any person acting on behalf of the same, previously to any such petition, nor any actions, suits, or other proceedings pending at the date of such petition.

59. That no judgment, decree, or order to be obtained or entered up against the official manager of any company, as representing the same, shall affect or be executed against the person or property of the party who may for the time being be such official manager, otherwise than as a contributory, and that every official manager shall always be fully re-imbursed and indemnified, out of the assets of the company or out of the credits thereof, and, if necessary, by calls to be made on the contributories, for all losses, costs, charges, damages, and expenses, without deduction, save and except such, if any, losses, costs, charges, damages, and expenses as shall have been unlawfully or improperly sustained or incurred by any such official manager.

60. That no action, suit, or other proceeding in any of her Majesty's superior courts at Westminster or Dublin shall be instituted or brought or proceeded with by the official manager, whether against a contributory of the company or any debtor or other stranger thereto, but with the leave or according to the general direction of the Master, to be obtained in that behalf by the official manager, who shall accordingly apply for the same; and that no such action, suit, or other proceeding shall be proceeded with if the Master shall, by writing under his hand, direct that the same shall be stayed or discontinued: Provided always, that the want of such leave as aforesaid shall not be set up as or in anywise constitute a defence to any such action, suit, or other proceeding.

61. That no claim or demand which any contributory of the company may have in respect of his share, or in respect of the share of any deceased or former contributory of the company, right of whom he claims, of the capital or joint stock thereof, or of any dividends, interest, profit, or bonus payable or apportionable in respect of such share, shall be capable of being set off, either at law or in equity, against any demand which the official manager of such company may have against such contributory, upon a distinct or independent account, contract, or dealing between the person being such contributory and the company: Provided nevertheless, that if a balance shall appear to be and shall be justly due from any contributory on his account with the company as contributory as entered in the books of the company, and such contributory shall, upon a distinct and independent account, contract, or dealing, be a creditor of such company, the official manager shall set off the amount of such balance against the demand which such contributory shall have or be entitled to as such creditor as aforesaid.

62. That it shall be lawful for the official manager, with the leave of the Master, to be signified by writing under his hand, to defend, either by his official style and designation, or in the name of the original defendant, any action or suit brought against any individual contributory of the company; but that in such case any judgment or decree to be obtained by the plaintiff shall have the same effect, but no further or otherwise, than if the same had been obtained against the original defendant in such action or suit.

63. That it shall be lawful for the Master, as well before as after the order absolute, to summon before him any person, whether a contributory of such company or not, who shall be or shall be deemed to be capable of giving information concerning such company, or the estate, dealings, or affairs thereof, and also to require such person so summoned to produce, and if a contributory to leave with the Master or the official manager, any books, papers, deeds, writings, or other documents in the custody, possession, or power of such person, which may appear to the Master to be necessary or expedient to be produced or left as aforesaid; and it shall be lawful for the Master to examine every such person upon oath, by word of mouth, or upon interrogatories in writing, concerning such company, or the estate, dealings, or affairs thereof; and every person so summoned who shall not come before the Master, or shall refuse to be sworn and examined, or shall not fully answer to the satisfaction of the Master, or shall refuse to sign or subscribe his examination, or shall refuse to produce or shall not produce any such book, paper, deed, writing, or document, shall be liable to be committed to the Queen's Prison: Provided always, that every such default or refusal shall be certified by the Master, and thereupon such order shall be made by the Court, upon motion for that purpose, of which notice shall be given to the person sought to be affected, as the Court shall see fit.

64. That every person summoned before the Master as a witness shall be entitled to such costs and charges as are by law allowed to witnesses; but that where any person who at the time of the order absolute was a contributory of such company shall be summoned as aforesaid, every such person shall have such costs and charges only, if any, as the Master in his discretion shall think fit; but in all such cases the Master may suspend the payment of such costs until such time as he shall think reasonable.

65. That if any person who at the date of the order absolute was a contributory of such company shall wilfully conceal or withhold any real or personal estate or effects of such company, and shall not within thirty days after the order absolute discover such concealed or withheld estate or effects to the Master or to the official manager, every such person shall forfeit the sum of 100*l.*, and double the value of the estate so concealed or withheld, to be recovered in action of debt by the official manager in any of her Majesty's courts of record, for the use of the company; and the certificate of the Master, signed by him, of such wilful concealment or withholding, shall be evidence in such action of debt of such wilful concealment or withholding.

66. That after the appointment of the official manager of the company the Master shall from time to time, by order to be made upon the application of the official manager or of any contributory, order and require any contributory, trustee, receiver, banker, or agent to pay, deliver, or transfer forthwith, or within such time as the Master shall direct, into the hands of the official manager, any sum or balance, books, papers, estate, or effects which shall happen to be in his hands for the time being, and to which the company is prima facie entitled, or which, in the case of a contributory, shall appear to the debit of his account as contributory with the company, as entered in the books of the company, anything in the present practice of courts of equity to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided nevertheless, that it shall be lawful for the person upon whom any such order shall be made to apply to the Master to discharge or vary any such order, or to enlarge the time thereby fixed for such payment.

67. That when any order shall have been made under this act, by the Master or by the Court, for the payment of any monies, or for the delivery of any effects, books, or documents to the Master or the official manager, and default shall have been made by any person in obeying such order, the same may be enforced against such person upon affidavit, by the official manager, of such default, and without any previous demand by the official manager or any other person.

68. That the conveyance or assignment by the official manager of any company of all real estate, of whatever tenure, and chattels real, by this act vested in such official manager, shall be by deed of grant; and that every such deed of grant shall be approved by the Master, and such approbation certified in the usual way; and being so approved and certified, shall be effectual to grant all the interest for the time being vested in the official manager, or which by such deed shall be expressed to be granted, of and in the real estate or chattels real intended to be granted, to the uses, intents, and purposes, or upon the trusts, or subject to the powers, provisions, agreements, and declarations, which may be contained and declared in the same, according to the nature and tenure of the subject of the grant, without any confirmation by order of Court or otherwise; and that the signature of the official manager to any deed so certified, wherein any money shall be expressed to be received by him, shall effectually discharge all persons by whom the same shall be expressed to be paid from seeing to or being accountable for the application of the money therein acknowledged to be received by the official manager: Provided always, that in the case of any copyhold or customaryhold hereditaments such deed of grant shall be entered upon the court rolls of the manor of which the same are holden, and when so entered shall be effectual without any surrender or admittance of the grantee, subject nevertheless to the rents, fines, heriots, suits, and services due and of right accustomed for the said lands.

69. That where any part of the assets of any company respecting which an order absolute shall have been made shall consist of any Government stock, funds, or annuities, or of the stock of any public company in England, Scotland, or Ireland, not standing in the name of the company, it shall be lawful for the Master, by writing under his hand, to direct such person as the Master shall think proper to appoint for that purpose in the place of the person in whose name or names such stock, funds, or annuities shall be standing, (but subject nevertheless to any distringas, stop order, or other process which may affect the same for the time being), to transfer the same into the name of "the official manager of" the company (described as aforesaid); and the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, and all other companies and societies, and their officers and servants, are hereby required to allow such transfer to be made, and they are hereby respectively indemnified for all things done or permitted pursuant to such direction.

70. That all monies which shall be received, recovered, collected, and got in under this act by the official manager, and which shall be derived by the sale or conversion of any of the assets or estate of the company of which he shall be appointed official manager, shall be paid by such official manager into the Bank of England or into the Bank of Ireland (as the case may be), or any branch bank thereof respectively, to the credit of an account to be intitled "The Account of the Official Manager" of the particular company in respect of which such monies shall have been received, recovered, collected, got in, and derived as aforesaid; and no money which shall be standing to such account shall be paid out by the Bank except upon cheques signed by the official manager and countersigned by the Master: Provided always, that it shall be lawful for the official manager to retain in his hands for current purposes such a sum of money as the Master shall from time to time direct.

71. That the official manager shall with all convenient speed after his appointment make out from the books of accounts and papers of the company a list of all debts and demands due or which may be claimed from the company, and shall make such observations with reference to such debts and demands, or any of them, and as to the amount thereof respectively, as he shall think proper to be made thereon, in order to assist the Master in forming a judgment thereon, when any debt shall be claimed to be proved before the Master in pursuance of the advertisement in that behalf hereinafter mentioned; and when any of such debts shall have been proved or claimed before the Master as hereinafter mentioned the same shall be entered in a new list to be made by the official manager, so that the debts and demands allowed by the Master shall be distinguishable from such of them as shall be disallowed, or shall be allowed only as claims; and in case any debts or demands which shall be disallowed, or allowed only as claims, shall be afterwards allowed by the Master as having been duly proved, or shall be established by legal proceedings or otherwise, such changes and variations shall be made by the official manager in such list or lists of debts as shall be required to be made in order that such list or lists may correctly represent the state and condition of the affairs of the company in regard to the debts and demands due or claimed from or against them; and in such list or lists the official manager, in cases where it shall be necessary or convenient for the purposes of the winding up, shall enter the dates or times at which such debts or demands, or any of them respectively, were contracted or became due, and shall enter all sums of money which shall have been paid in discharge or on account of such debts and demands, or any of them; and such lists respectively, and all changes and variations therein, shall be entered by the official manager in a book to be provided and kept by him; and such book shall from time to time as occasion shall require be inspected by the Master.

72. That within ten days after the order absolute shall have been brought in before him the Master shall cause to be advertised in the London Gazette that he is acting in the winding up of the company, and thereby requiring creditors to come in before him, and to prove their debts and demands.

73. That after the first appointment of an official manager no creditor or other person shall, except as far as the Master shall permit, have power to commence or to proceed with any action against the official manager or against the company, or any other person representing the same, or who is sued as a contributory thereof, until after proof, or exhibiting or making such proof as he may be able, of his debt or demand before the Master, as hereinafter mentioned; and it shall be lawful for any judge of the court in which such action shall be pending, upon summons taken out before him for that purpose, to order that all further proceedings in such action shall be stayed until after such proof shall have been made or exhibited before the Master.

74. That the creditors of the company making proof of their respective debts or demands before the Master shall make proof thereof by deposition or affidavit in the same manner in all respects as debts are now allowed to be proved in bankruptcy: Provided nevertheless, that it shall be lawful for the Master to allow or direct the proof of such debts or demands, or any of them, to be made by the official manager or by the creditors in such other form and in such other manner as he shall think fit.

75. That the Master shall, upon proof made or offered and exhibited before him of the debts and demands due or claimed from or against the company, or any of them, either allow or disallow, or allow as claims only, such debts and demands respectively, according to the nature of the case and of the proof adduced or exhibited before him, and shall, by writing under his hand, declare such allowance and disallowance, or such disallowance as claims only.

76. That the official manager shall make out a list of the members and other contributories of such company, together with their respective addresses, and the number of shares or extent of interest to be attributed to each, and such list shall as far as practicable distinguish the several classes of contributories, and such variations and additions shall afterwards be from time to time made therein and thereto as that the same shall, as far as may be, be a true and accurate list of all members and other contributories; and in case any of the contributories shall after the making of the order absolute assign or dispose of any share, right, title, or interest in the company, or the capital or profits thereof, it shall be lawful for the Master, upon the application of the contributory making such assignment, or of the person in whose favour the same shall have been made, or of any contributory of the company, or of the official manager, to introduce into the list of contributories the name of the person to whom such assignment shall have been made, either by way of substitution for the name of the contributory making such assignment or conjunctively therewith: Provided nevertheless, that no such assignment or disposal shall release or exonerate the party making the same from any liability as a contributory further or otherwise than he would be released or exonerated if the affairs of the company were not wound up under this act.

77. That the list of contributories so made out by the official manager shall be settled by the Master; and previous notice of his being about to settle the same shall be given in the London Gazette, and likewise to the Master shall direct, and such list, and all variations therein and additions thereto, when respectively settled by the Master, shall be entered by the official manager in a book which shall from time to time be pected by the Master, and certified by him by writing under his hand to be entered therein.

78. That notice in writing shall be given to every person included in or proposed to be specially excluded from the list of contributories, or in any variation therein or addition thereto, as aforesaid, before the same shall be settled by the Master, hereby notifying that such person is included in or excluded from the list, and if included then in what character, and for what number of shares, and of what amount, or for what other interest such person is so included; and that, if no cause shall be shown to the contrary to the satisfaction of the Master, by a day to be fixed by the Master, and to be specified in such notice, the list shall not as to every person failing or neglecting to show cause within the time to be so fixed, be afterwards disputed, without leave of the Court first obtained.

79. That so far as the Master shall have settled such list of contributories, or any variation therein or addition thereto, every person included in such list, or in any addition thereto or variation therein, or specially excluded therefrom, shall, unless cause be duly shown by him to the contrary to the satisfaction of the Master, be fully bound and concluded by the list so settled, or by any exclusion therefrom, and shall not be entitled to contest the same, without leave of the Court first obtained for that purpose.

80. That after the Master shall have commenced to settle the list of contributories, no person shall be entitled to appear before him as a contributory of the company unless his name shall be on the list: Provided always, that any person, except such person as may have been previously specially excluded from such list, shall be at liberty from time to time to him, by way of proposal before the Master, that his name shall be inserted upon the list; and the Master shall, upon consideration thereof, either admit or reject such claim, by writing under his hand.

81. That it shall be lawful for any person whose name shall stand upon the list of contributories to summon any other person whose name shall not be upon such list, and who shall not have been previously specially excluded therefrom, to appear before the Master, at a day and time to be therein specified, to shew cause why his name should not be included in or specially excluded from the list; and upon the return of such summons, at any future time to be fixed by the Master, he shall consider the liability or alleged liability or right of the party so summoned to be inserted in such list, and shall by writing under his hand declare whether such party shall or shall not be included in or excluded from the list.

82. That the monies and assets of the company, or such of them as shall for the time being be got in and realised, or any part thereof, shall with all convenient speed be paid and applied by the official manager, under the direction of the Master, to be from time to time given under his hand, in or towards the satisfaction of the debts or of any of the debts of the company, in such manner, whether by way of dividend or otherwise, as the Master shall direct.

83. That at any time before the whole of the assets of such company shall have been collected or converted, and if the assets remaining to be collected or converted shall not be capable of being immediately realised, although such assets may not appear to be insufficient; and also after the assets of the company shall have been wholly exhausted, it shall be lawful for the Master from time to time to make calls on the contributories, or on such individual contributories or classes of contributories as he may think proper, (but so far only as such contributories respectively shall be liable at law or in equity to pay the same,) as well for raising such amount as may be necessary to pay the debts or liabilities or any of the debts or liabilities of such company, or any part thereof, as the costs, charges, and expenses of winding up the same, as also for the purpose of adjusting and settling the respective claims of contributories upon each other, or upon the company, whether such claims shall have arisen before or after the date of the petition for dissolution and winding up, or for winding up, as the case may be; and the amount to be raised by means of such calls, and so the residue of the assets and estate of the company after the payment of all debts and liabilities, costs, charges, and expenses, shall be paid and distributed by the official manager, under the direction of the Master, and in such manner as shall (so far as possible) satisfy all such claims, and shall finally wind up and settle the affairs of the company.

84. That after the Master shall have determined the amount necessary to be raised by means of a call, he shall apportion the same among the several contributories of the company appearing from time to time upon the list, so far as then settled by the Master, or such of them as ought to contribute thereto, according to their respective liabilities, and that such apportionment may be made against such parties as he has already determined to be contributories, although it may then be under consideration or uncertain whether other parties ought or ought not to be included in the list of contributories.

85. That previously to the making of any call the Master shall, in such manner as the Court, by any general order or any special order in the matter, shall from time to time direct, and in default of and subject to any such direction then by advertisement in two successive numbers of the London Gazette, and otherwise as he shall think proper, give notice of a day, hour, and place at which he will make such call, and of the proposed amount thereof; and all parties interested shall be entitled to attend at such day, hour, and place, and to offer objections to or relating to any such call.

86. That, unless cause shall be shown to the contrary, to the satisfaction of the Master, at the time and place appointed for making such call, the Master shall then make an order for such call, and for the payment to the official manager of the balance which shall be due from the respective contributories, after debiting them with the amount of such call, on or before a day and at a place to be therein fixed, such day not being earlier than three weeks from the date of the peremptory order.

87. That every such order shall be advertised once or oftener in the London Gazette, and a copy of such order shall be served on the respective contributories, and every contributory shall also be furnished with a statement of the balance of his account, after debiting the same with the amount chargeable against him in respect of such call: Provided nevertheless, that the advertisement or the first advertisement (if more than one) of such order shall not take place at a less period than ten days after the date thereof, or in case any appeal shall be made to the Court against such order, then such advertisement or first advertisement shall not take place until after such appeal shall have been disposed of.

88. That it shall be lawful for the official manager, with the approbation of the Master, from time to time to enforce payment of, give time, or compound, or require or take any security for any balance or claim as against any of the contributories of the company, and also to abandon any such balance or claim where the contributory against whom the same is claimed shall die, or be found and adjudged bankrupt, or take the benefit of any act for the relief of insolvent debtors, or dwell or escape beyond seas, or be known to be insolvent or incapable of paying his debts, or in such other cases as the Master shall think fit; and it shall not be necessary to include in any subsequent call any contributory against whom any balance or claim shall have been abandoned, but the whole amount of every subsequent call shall be apportioned among the other contributories: Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall extend to discharge the estate of any such contributory so left out of any call from any claim which may exist against the same on behalf of the company or any other contributory thereof, but that it shall be lawful for the official manager to prove for the amount thereof in the matter of such bankruptcy or insolvency (if any), and to receive dividends thereon, or to proceed against such contributory for the same, whenever it may appear expedient so to do; and any monies so to be recovered shall be dealt with as part of the assets of the company, or otherwise as the Master shall direct.

89. That in case any money shall be due from the estate of a deceased contributory whose executor or administrator shall not admit assets, it shall be lawful for the Master to direct that any suit or action shall be brought or other steps taken for compelling payment of what shall be so due, and for obtaining, if necessary, an administration of the estate of such deceased contributory in or towards payment of his debts; and that any such suit or action shall and may be brought by the official manager by the style and designation aforesaid; and the production of the order or an office copy of the order for payment of any balance shall be sufficient evidence of the debt in respect of which such action or suit shall be brought as aforesaid.

90. That as far as in the judgment of the Master it shall be consistent with the interest of the company the Master shall cause the official manager to circulate and advertise in the London Gazette, or otherwise to give notice as the Master shall direct, of all accounts and balance sheets and particulars, if any, of proceedings in and about the liquidation which it shall be expedient to make known to the contributories or to the creditors of the company.

91. That in order to facilitate the winding up of the affairs of any company, and to determine and resolve any questions of law or of fact that may arise between such company and any of the contributories or creditors thereof, or between any two or more of the contributories, or between any contributory and any creditor, it shall be lawful for the Master to direct that such parties as he shall in that behalf appoint shall proceed to try, in such one of her Majesty's court of law at Westminster or Dublin as the Master shall think fit, any issues of fact, and to direct that any actions at law shall be brought and proceeded, or shall proceed for the purpose of trying any mixed question of law and fact necessary or proper, in the opinion of the Master, to be determined in order to the complete winding up of the affairs of such company; and the said Master shall settle all such issues, and it shall be lawful for him to give such directions as he shall think right or expedient with reference thereto, or to any such actions as aforesaid; and such issues shall be accordingly tried: Provided nevertheless, that no such issue or action shall be directed with reference to any questions between the company or any contributory thereof and any creditor thereof, without the consent of such creditor.

92. That the Master shall, subject to such appeal as herein provided, adjudicate upon and determine any matter in contest between contributories or classes of contributories, or between the company and any individual contributories or classes of contributories, which may be necessary or proper to be determined in order to the complete winding up of the affairs of the company.

93. That no orders, reports, or certificates of the Master under this act shall require confirmation, except any such special report as herein mentioned.

94. That all orders, reports, certificates, and other acts and proceedings done and taken by the Master in the prosecution of any matter referred to him under this act, and all affidavits, interrogatories, examinations, and depositions, shall be filed in the Master's office as far as may be in one continuous file after the manner used in bankruptcy, and shall, together with all other documents relating to the same matter, be kept by him as part of the proceedings therein, and the same shall from time to time be produced in court or otherwise as occasion shall require.

95. That all orders of the Master under this act shall be enforced in the same manner and by the same or any such process as orders of the Court made in any suit pending therein against any party thereto.

96. That the Master, in addition to all powers and authorities vested in him by this act, shall, in proceeding under any reference to be made to him by any such order absolute or otherwise under this act, have and exercise all the powers and authorities, not being at variance with the powers and authorities vested in him by this act, which he could in anywise have and exercise under the practice of the court in any matter referred to him by a decree or order made and pronounced in a suit.

117. That where the only registered place of business of any company or the head or only office of any company which shall not have any registered place of business shall be situate in England, then the petition for the dissolution and winding up or for the winding up of such company (as the case may be) to be presented under this act shall be presented to the Court of Chancery in England, and where the only registered place of business or the head or only office (as the case may be) of any company shall be situate in Ireland, then the petition for the dissolution and winding up or for the winding up of such company (as the case may be) to be presented under this act shall be presented to the Court of Chancery in Ireland, and such respective Courts shall thereupon have and exercise in the matter all jurisdiction, powers, and authorities given by this act: Provided always, that where any company shall have a registered place of business or an office or shall transact business both in England and Ireland a petition for the dissolution and winding up or for the winding up of such company (as the case may be) may be presented under this act either to the Court of Chancery in England or to the Court of Chancery in Ireland, and thereupon, except so far as the Court to which such petition shall be first presented shall otherwise direct, the said Court shall exclusively have and exercise in the matter all the jurisdiction, powers, authorities, and discretion given by this act, and all provisions in this act contained shall be applicable in like manner as if the only registered place of business or the head or only office of such company had been situate within the jurisdiction of the same Court.

118. 119. That it shall be in the discretion of the Court, on application made to it in that behalf by any party interested in the matter of the winding up, to stay proceedings on any report or order of the Master.

120. That if any matter shall arise in or about the dissolution or winding up of any company under this act which shall appear to the Master not to be sufficiently provided for by this act, or by any rules or orders for the time being in force, it shall be lawful for the Master, on the application of the official manager, or of any party to the winding up, or at his discretion, to report the same to the Court, who may make thereon such special order or such general order, in manner by this act directed, as may be necessary or expedient under the circumstances.

121. Provided always, and be it enacted, That, notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor from time to time to appoint any number of persons to act as official managers under this act, and by any general order, or by any special order with reference to any particular company to be made in that behalf, to direct that the official managers of any company to be dissolved or wound up under this act shall be chosen exclusively, or at the discretion of the Master, from the list of persons to be so appointed as from a date to be fixed by any such order, and also to direct that such official managers shall be named or selected in rotation or otherwise, and also to determine whether any and what security shall be given by any official managers so to be appointed, and whether they shall exercise all or any of the powers, authorities, and discretions by this act given to the official manager, and in all respects to fix and regulate the conduct and duties of the official managers so to be appointed; and in default of and subject to any such order, all the provisions in this act contained with reference to the official manager, his duties, powers, authorities, and discretions, shall apply in all respects to any official manager to be appointed under this present clause.

122. That it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, with the advice and consent of the Master of the Rolls and any one of the Vice-Chancellors for the time being, or with the advice and consent of any two of the Vice-Chancellors, from time to time, and as often as circumstances shall require, to make and prescribe such rules and orders concerning the form and mode of proceeding to be had for settling and enforcing the contribution to be paid by any contributory for the time being of any company, and the practice to be observed by the Court in or relating to such proceeding, or any matters relating thereto, and the form and mode of proceeding to be had and taken before the Master primarily, or by reference from the Court, in any matter relating to contribution, as shall from time to time seem necessary or proper for the advancement of justice in such cases, and for adjusting and determining the rights and equities of the parties concerned, and for suing for and getting in the assets, and for ascertaining and discharging the liabilities of such company, and requiring the creditors thereof to claim their debts, and finally winding up the affairs thereof with as little delay, expense, and uncertainty as possible, and afterwards to vary, discharge, or alter such rules or orders, or any of them, by any other rules or orders, although such rules and orders respectively, or any of them, may repeal or vary the provisions as to procedure contained in this act or any of them, or may prescribe others in lieu of the same or any of them: Provided always, that such rules and orders shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament within one month from the making thereof, if Parliament be then sitting, or, if Parliament be not then sitting, within one month from the commencement of the then next session of Parliament.

123. CAP. XLVI.

An Act for the Removal of Defects in the Administration of Criminal Justice. [14th August, 1848].

- Sect. 1. Accessories before the Fact to any Felony may be punished in the same Degree as the Principal.*
- 2. Trial and Conviction of Accessories after the Fact.*
- 3. As to Additions of Counts in Indictments for stealing and receiving stolen Property.*
- 4. Courts of Oyer and Terminer may cause Indictments to be amended.*
- 5. Not to extend to Scotland.*
- 6. Act may be amended, &c.*

Whereas the technical strictness of criminal proceedings might in some instances be further relaxed, so as to insure the punishment of the guilty, without depriving the accused of any just means of defence: And whereas it is expedient to make further provision for the more effectual prosecution of accessories before and after the fact to felony: And whereas it is also expedient that any accessory before the fact to felony should be liable to be indicted, tried, convicted, and punished in all respects like the principal, as is now the case in treason and in all misdemeanours: Be it therefore enacted, &c., that from and after the passing of this act, if any person shall become an accessory before the fact to any felony, whether the same be a felony at common law or by virtue of any statute or statutes made or to be made, such person may be indicted, tried, convicted, and punished in all respects as if he were a principal felon.

2. And whereas an accessory after the fact to felony at present be tried only along with the principal felon, or after the principal felon has been convicted, and not otherwise, which is sometimes productive of a failure of justice: Be it therefore enacted, that from and after the passing of this act, if any person shall become an accessory after the fact to any felony, whether the same be a felony at common law or by virtue of any statute or statutes made or to be made, he may be indicted and convicted either as an accessory after the fact to the principal felony together with the principal felon, or after the conviction of the principal felon, or may be indicted and convicted of a substantive felony whether the principal felon shall or shall not have been previously convicted or shall or shall not be amenable to justice, and may therefore be punished in like manner as any accessory after the fact to the same felony if convicted as an accessory may be punished: and the offence of such person, howsoever indicted, may be inquired of, tried, determined, and punished by any Court which shall have jurisdiction to try the principal felon in the same manner as if the act by reason of which such person shall have become an accessory had been committed at the same place as the principal felony: Provided always, that no person who shall be once duly tried for any such offence, whether as an accessory after the fact or as for a substantive felony, shall be liable to be again indicted or tried for the same offence.

3. And whereas, according to the present practice of courts of criminal jurisdiction, it is not permitted in an indictment for stealing property to add a count for receiving the same property knowing it to have been stolen, or in an indictment for receiving stolen property knowing it to have been stolen to add a count for stealing the same property, and justice is hereby often defeated: Be it therefore enacted, that from and after the passing of this act, in every indictment for feloniously stealing property, it shall be lawful to add a count for feloniously receiving the same property knowing it to have been stolen, and in any indictment for feloniously receiving property knowing it to have been stolen it shall be lawful to add a count for feloniously stealing the same property; and where any such indictment shall have been preferred and found against any person, the prosecutor shall not be put to his election, but it shall be lawful for the jury who shall try the same to find a verdict of guilty, either of stealing the property or of receiving it knowing it to have been stolen; and if such indictment shall have been preferred and found against two or more persons, it shall be lawful for the jury who shall try the same to find all or any of the said persons guilty either of stealing the property or of receiving it knowing it to have been stolen, or to find one or more of the said persons guilty of stealing the property, and the other or others of them guilty of receiving it knowing it to have been stolen.

4. And whereas a failure of justice frequently takes place in criminal trials by reason of variances between writings pre-used in evidence and the recital or setting forth thereof in the indictment or information, and the same cannot now be amended at the trial, except in cases of misdemeanour: for every offence thereof be it enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for any court of oyer and terminer and general gaol delivery, such Court shall see fit so to do, to cause the indictment or information for any offence whatever, when any variance or differences shall appear between any matter in writing or in print produced in evidence and the recital or setting forth thereof in the indictment or information whereon the trial is pending, to be forthwith amended in such particular or particulars by some officer of the court, and after such amendment the trial shall proceed in the same manner in all respects, both with regard to the liability of witnesses to be indicted for perjury and otherwise, as if no such variance or variances had appeared.

5. Provided always, that nothing in this act contained shall extend to Scotland.

6. That this act may be amended or repealed by any act to be passed in this session of Parliament.

LONDON, OCTOBER 14, 1848.

THE "Joint-stock Companies Winding-up Act, 1848*," intended to render the dissolution and winding up, or the winding up of joint-stock companies, practicable under the direction of the Court of Chancery. Its provisions are very numerous and minute, and demand some detailed observations. It includes all companies corporate or unincorporate, which are included in the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 111, and in the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 98; all banking companies which would have been within those two Acts, if they had not been specially exempted from the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110; all companies which, under the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 28, shall have become bankrupt before the 1st March, 1848; and all companies, associations, and partnerships formed after the passing of the act, where the capital is to be divided into shares, and the shares transferable without the express consent of all the partners. It includes also, with certain exceptions, mining companies and benefit societies not enrolled.

We pass over the explanatory clause, (sect. 3), which is not otherwise peculiar than as introducing the new word contributory, to designate any person liable as a member, or as representative of a member, or otherwise, for the payment of the liabilities of a company, and as fitting in the clause converting plurals into singulars, and singulars into plurals, the usual qualification, subjecting the operation of the clause to the context and the nature of the subject-matter. Of course, such qualification will be implied in construing the act. But as the clause stands literally, it would create a most extraordinary jumble.

The 5th section, coupled with the 14th, constitutes the essence of the act. By it power is given to any person, being or claiming to be a contributory, to present a petition to the Lord Chancellor, or to the Master of the Rolls, for the dissolution and winding up of any undissolved company, or for the winding up of the affairs of any dissolved company, in certain cases. And by the 14th section, the Court may either dismiss such petition, or may make an order for the dissolution and winding up, or for the winding up, as the case may be, referring such winding up to one of the Masters of the Court.

The cases in which a petition will lie, stated shortly, are—

1. When a company has committed an act of bankruptcy within the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 111, and 8 & 9 Vict. c. 98.

2. If a company has filed a declaration with the Lord Chancellor's Secretary of Bankrupts, that it is unable to meet its engagements.

3. If a judgment shall have been recovered against a company, and it does not within a certain time, and after certain proceedings, satisfy such judgment.

4. If any decree or order in equity against the company for payment of money shall not, within certain limits as to time, &c., be obeyed.

5. If any action for money due from a company shall have been brought against a contributory, and the company shall not in due time, and after certain proceedings, indemnify such contributory.

6. If any creditor, whose debt would in amount support a fiat, shall have taken certain proceedings at law, to claim such debt, and the company shall not in due time have paid it, or entered an appearance to defend.

7. If any company shall have been dissolved, or have ceased to carry on business, or be winding up, but not wound up; and,

8. If any other satisfactory ground can be shown to the Court.

* This not very euphonous designation is the one prescribed by the act itself, and we shall, therefore, use it as convenient if not elegant. The act is printed ante, p. 390.

The petition must be advertised and served at the head or only office of the company, on any member, officer, or servant of the company there; or if no such person can be found there, by leaving it at the head or only office, and if no office can be found, then by serving it upon any member, officer, or servant generally. And if neither officer nor person can be found, the Court may, on proof of the advertising, hear the petition without proof of service.

Nearly all the clauses of the act subsequently to the 14th, relate to the details of working out the winding up of a company in the Master's office, by the agency of the person styled "the official manager."

It is material, however, to observe, that, by the 99th section, an appeal against the decision of the Master on any point, lies to the Lord Chancellor or the Master of the Rolls on motion simply, without the necessity of objections and exceptions. That by the 101st, any order of the Master of the Rolls or of any of the Vice-Chancellors may be re-heard on motion before the Lord Chancellor. And that by the 102nd, an appeal lies to the House of Lords from all orders made under the act.

The effect intended by this act, and which will probably be produced by it, is to put an end to all the difficulties which render the winding up of an unsuccessful company by a suit in Chancery nearly impossible, by sweeping away at one blow all the machinery of bill and answer, with its difficulties as to parties, and the resulting inconveniences and delays, substituting for the initiative process a petition; representing, by force of the act, every person interested in it primarily by the official manager; and bringing before the Court all parties not represented, or not thinking themselves represented by him, by serving the petition on the ideal representative of the company, its office, or any one found there. The act, in fact, transfers on petition the whole estate of the company to a trustee, and then sends the estate into the Master's office, to be there administered under the instrumentality of such trustee, very much as the estate of a deceased person is administered under the instrumentality of his executor. The contrivance is so simple in principle, and apparently so likely to work well in practice, that one only wonders it was not thought of and applied sooner. Henceforth, we apprehend, the unhappy shareholders of unfortunate companies, will find a harbour of refuge in the once dreaded Court of Chancery, and will there succeed in speedily ascertaining what are their real liabilities and what are their assets.

4. That the said Justices and Barons, when a case has been reserved for their opinion, shall have power, if they think fit, to cause the case or certificate to be sent back for amendment, and thereupon the same shall be amended accordingly, and judgment shall be delivered after it shall have been amended.

5. That whenever any writ of error shall be brought upon any judgment on any indictment, information, presentment, or petition, in any criminal case, and the court of error shall reverse the judgment, it shall be competent for such court of error either to pronounce the proper judgment or to remit the record to the Court below, in order that such Court may pronounce the proper judgment upon such indictment, information, presentment, or inquisition.

Whereas it is expedient to amend the law for the trial of Election Petitions: be it enacted, &c. that an act passed in the 7 & 8 Vict. [c. 103], intituled "An Act to amend the Law for the Trial of controverted Elections of Members to serve in Parliament," shall be repealed, except as to any act done or any proceeding incident to any election petition presented under the said recited act, all which acts and proceedings shall have effect, and shall, save as hereinafter specially provided, be continued and completed as if this act had not passed: Provided always, that this enactment shall not revive an act passed in the 9 Geo. 4, [c. 22], intituled "An Act to consolidate and amend the Laws relating to the Trial of controverted Elections or Returns of Members to serve in Parliament," repealed by the said act, nor shall it revive so much of an act passed in the 42 Geo. 3, [c. 106], intituled "An Act for regulating the Trial of controverted Elections or Returns of Members to serve in the United Parliament for Ireland," nor so much of an act passed in the 47 Geo. 3, [c. 14], intituled "An Act to amend several Acts for regulating the Trial of controverted Elections or Returns of Members to serve in Parliament, so far as the same relate to Ireland," as requires the parties appearing before any select committee to interchange before the said committee lists of the votes and names of voters to which either of the parties intends to object, and statements in writing respecting matters which either of the said parties mean to insist upon, contend for, or to object to, or as provides that no witness shall be called or examined to anything not specified in such lists or statements, also repealed by the firstly-recited act.

2. That every petition presented to the House of Commons within the time from time to time limited by the House for receiving election petitions, and complaining of an undue election or return of a member to serve in Parliament, or complaining that no return has been made according to the requisition of any writ issued for the election of a member to serve in Parliament, or complaining of the special matters contained in any such return, and which petition shall be subscribed by some person who voted or had a right to vote at the election to which the same relates, or by some person claiming to have had a right to be returned or elected thereat, or alleging himself to have been a candidate at the election, shall be deemed an election petition.

3. That before any election petition shall be presented to the House, a recognisance shall be entered into by one, two, three, or four persons, as sureties for the person subscribing such petition, for the sum of one thousand pounds, in one sum, or in several sums of not less than two hundred and fifty pounds each, for the payment of all costs and expenses which under the provisions hereinafter contained shall become payable by the person subscribing the petition to any witness summoned in his behalf, or to the sitting member or other the party complained of in such petition, or to any party who may be admitted to defend such petition, as hereinafter provided.

4. That every person who enters into any such recognisance shall testify upon oath in writing to be sworn at the time of entering into the said recognisance, and before the same person by whom his recognisance is taken, that he is seized or possessed of real or personal estate, (or both), above what will satisfy his debts, of the clear value of the sum for which he is bound by his said recognisance; and every such affidavit shall be annexed to the recognisance.

5. That in every such recognisance shall be mentioned the names and usual places of residence or business of the persons becoming sureties as aforesaid, with such other description of the sureties as may be sufficient to identify them easily; and such recognisance may be in the form or to the effect set forth in the schedule to this act, with such alteration as may be necessary to adapt such form to the circumstances of each case.

6. That any person by whom an election petition is signed may, instead of procuring a recognisance for the full amount of the sum hereinbefore required, pay into the Bank of England, to the account of the Speaker and the examiner of recognisances, as trustees for the like purposes for which the recognisance is hereinbefore required any amount of money which he thinks fit, not being less than two hundred and fifty pounds; and in such case the person by whom the petition is signed shall be required to find sureties for so much only of the sum of one thousand pounds as the sum paid into the Bank falls short of that sum; and no money shall be deemed for the purposes of this act to be paid into the Bank of England until a Bank receipt or certificate for the same is procured, and delivered to the examiner of recognisances.

7. That no election petition shall be received unless at the time it is presented to the House it be indorsed by a certificate under the hand of the examiner of recognisances, that the recognisance hereinbefore required has been entered into and received by him, with the affidavit thereunto annexed, and, if the recognisance have not been taken for the whole amount, that a Bank receipt or certificate for so much money as the recognisance falls short of one thousand pounds has been delivered to him, as hereinbefore required.

8. That the petitioner may, at any time after the presentation thereof, withdraw the same, upon giving notice in writing under his hand, or under the hand of his agent, to the Speaker, and also to the sitting member or his agent, and also to any party who may have been admitted to oppose the prayer of such petition, that it is not intended to proceed with the petition; and in such case the petitioner shall be liable to the payment of such costs and expenses as have been incurred by the sitting member or other party complained of in such petition, and also by any party admitted to oppose the prayer of such petition, to be taxed as hereinafter provided.

9. That the Speaker of the House of Commons shall appoint a fit person to be examiner of recognisances; and every person so appointed shall hold his office during the pleasure of the Speaker, and shall execute the duties of his office conformably to such directions as he may from time to time receive from the Speaker.

10. That in case of the illness, temporary disability, or unavoidable absence of the examiner of recognisances, the Speaker may appoint a fit person to perform the duties of examiner of recognisances during such illness, disability, or absence; and throughout this act the expression "examiner of recognisances" shall be deemed to include and apply to the person so appointed, and for the time being performing such duties.

11. That every recognisance hereinbefore required shall be entered into, and every affidavit hereinbefore required shall be sworn, before the examiner of recognisances or a justice of the peace, and the said examiner, and also every justice of the peace, is hereby empowered to take the same; and every such recognisance and affidavit taken before a justice, being duly certified under the hand of such justice, shall be delivered to the examiner of recognisances.

12. That on or before the day when any such petition is presented to the House the names and descriptions of the sureties, when there are sureties, as set forth in the recognisance, shall be entered in a book to be kept by the examiner of recognisances in his office; and the said book, and also the recognisance and affidavit, and the Bank receipt for any money paid into the Bank of England, shall be open to the inspection of all parties concerned.

13. That any sitting member petitioned against, or any electors petitioning and admitted parties to defend the election or return, may object to any such recognisance on the ground that the same is invalid, or that the same was not duly entered into or received by the examiner of recognisances, with the affidavit thereunto annexed as hereinbefore required, or on the ground that the sureties or any of them are insufficient, or that a surety is dead, or that he cannot be found or ascertained from the want of a sufficient description in the recognisance, or that a person named in the recognisance has not duly acknowledged the same; provided that the ground of objection shall be stated in writing under the hand of the objecting party or his agent, and shall be delivered to the examiner of recognisances within ten days or not later than twelve of the clock at noon of the eleventh day after the presentation of the petition, if the surety objected to reside in England, or within fourteen days or not later than twelve of the clock at noon of the fifteenth day after the presentation of the petition if the surety objected to reside in Scotland or Ireland: Provided also, that if either such eleventh or such fifteenth day happen to be a Sunday, Good Friday, or Christmas-day, it shall be sufficient if such notice of objection be delivered to the examiner of recognisances not later than twelve of the clock at noon of the following day.

14. That as soon as any such statement of objection is received by the examiner of recognisances he shall put up an acknowledgment thereof in some conspicuous part of his office, and shall appoint a day for hearing such objections, not less than three nor more than five days from the day on which he received such statement; and the petitioner and his agent shall be allowed to examine and take copies of every such objection.

15. That at the time appointed the examiner of recognisances shall inquire into the alleged objections, on the grounds stated in the notice of objection, but not on any other ground; and for the purpose of such inquiry the examiner of recognisances may examine upon oath any persons tendered by either party for examination by him, and may also receive in evidence any affidavit relating to the matter in dispute before him, sworn before him, or before any Master of the High Court of Chancery or justice of the peace, each of whom is hereby authorised to take and certify such affidavit; and the examiner of recognisances may, if he think fit, adjourn the said inquiry from time to time until he decide on the validity of such objections, and he may, if he think fit, award costs to be paid by the party to the other, which costs shall be taxed and covered as hereinbefore provided for the costs and expenses of prosecuting or opposing election petitions; and the decision of the examiner of recognisances shall be final and conclusive against all parties.

16. That if any surety die, and his death be stated as a ground of objection before the end of the time allowed for objecting to recognisances, the petitioner may pay into the Bank of England, on the account of the Speaker and the examiner of recognisances, the sum for which the deceased surety was bound; and upon the delivery of a Bank receipt for such sum to the examiner of recognisances within three days after the day on which the statement of such objection was delivered to the examiner of recognisances, the recognisances shall be deemed unobjectionable, if no other ground of objection thereto be stated within the time before mentioned for stating objections to recognisances.

17. That if the examiner of recognisances have received any statement of objection to the recognisances to any such election petition, and have decided that such recognisances are objectionable, he shall forthwith report to the Speaker that such recognisances are objectionable; but if he shall have decided that such recognisances are unobjectionable, or if he have not received any such statement of objection, then, as soon as the time hereinbefore allowed for stating any such objection has elapsed after the presentation of the petition, or as soon thereafter as he has decided upon the statement of objection, the examiner of recognisances shall report to the Speaker that the recognisances to such petition are unobjectionable; and every such report shall be final and conclusive to all intents and purposes; and he shall make out a list of all election petitions on which he has reported to the Speaker that the recognisances are unobjectionable, in which list the petitions shall be arranged in the order in which they are so reported upon; and a copy of such list shall be kept in the office of the examiner of recognisances, and shall be open to the inspection of all parties concerned.

18. That if at any time before the appointment of a select committee, as hereinafter provided, to try any election petition, the Speaker of the House of Commons be informed, by a certificate in writing subscribed by two of the members of the said House, of the death of any sitting member whose election or return is complained of in such petition, or of the death of any member returned upon a double return whose election or return is complained of in such petition, or that a writ of summons has been issued under the Great Seal of Great Britain to summon any such member to Parliament as a peer of Great Britain, or if the House of Commons have resolved that the seat of any such member is by law become vacant, or if the House be informed, by a declaration in writing subscribed by any such member, and delivered to the Speaker within fourteen days after the day on which any such petition was presented, that it is not the intention of such member to defend his election or return, in every such case notice thereof shall immediately be sent by the Speaker to the general committee of elections, and to the members of the chairmen's panel, hereinafter mentioned, and also to the sheriff or other returning officer for the county, city, borough, district of burghs, port or place, to which such petition relates; and such sheriff or other returning officer shall cause a true copy of such notice to be affixed on or near the door of the county hall or town hall, or of the parish church, nearest to the place where such election has usually been held; and such notice shall also be inserted, by order of the Speaker, in one of the next two London Gazettes, and shall be communicated by him to the House.

19. That at any time within fourteen days after the day on which any election petition was presented, or within twenty-one days after the day on which any notice was inserted in the Gazette, to the effect that the seat is vacant, or that the member returned will not defend his election or return, or if either of the said periods expire during a prorogation of Parliament, or during an adjournment of the House of Commons for the Easter or Christmas holidays, then, on or before the second day on which the House meets after such prorogation or adjournment, any person who voted or had a right to vote at the election to which the petition relates may petition the House of Commons, praying to be admitted as a party to defend such return, or to oppose the prayer of such petition; and such person shall thereupon be admitted as a party, together with the sitting member, if he be then a party against such petition, or in the rooms of such member if he be not then a party against the petition; and every such petition shall be referred by the House to the general committee of elections hereinafter mentioned.

20. That whenever the member whose election or return is so complained of in such petition has given notice as aforesaid of his intention not to defend the same, he shall not be afterwards allowed to appear or act as a party against such petition in any proceedings thereupon, and he shall also be restrained from sitting in the House of Commons or voting on any question until such petition has been decided upon.

21. That if in the case of an election petition complaining of a double return, the member whose return is complained of

In such petition has given notice as aforesaid that it is not his intention to defend his return, and if no party, within the period hereinbefore allowed for that purpose, have been admitted to defend such return, then, if there be no election petition complaining of the other member returned on such double return, it shall be lawful for the last-mentioned member or other the persons who subscribed the petition complaining of such double return to withdraw such petition by letter addressed to the Speaker; and thereupon the order for referring such petition to the general committee of elections shall be discharged, and the House shall give the necessary directions for amending the said double return, by taking off the file the indenture by which the person so declining to defend his return was returned, or otherwise, as the case may require.

22. That in the first session of every Parliament, on the day after the last day allowed by the House of Commons for receiving election petitions, and in every subsequent session, as soon as convenient after the commencement of the session, the Speaker shall, by warrant under his hand, appoint six members of the House who are willing to serve, and against whose return no petition is then depending, and none of whom is a petitioner complaining of any election or return, to be members of a committee to be called "The General Committee of Elections;" and every such warrant shall be laid on the table of the House, and, if not disapproved by the House in the course of the three next days on which the House meets for the despatch of business, shall take effect as an appointment of such general committee.

23. That if the House disapprove any such warrant, the Speaker shall, on or before the third day on which the House meets after such disapproval, lay upon the table of the House a new warrant for the appointment of six members, qualified as aforesaid, and so from time to time until six members have been appointed by a warrant not disapproved by the House.

24. That the disapproval of the warrant may be either general in respect of the constitution of the whole committee, or special in respect of any member named in the warrant.

25. That the Speaker may, if he think fit, name in the second or any subsequent warrant any of the members named in any former warrant whose appointment has not been specially disapproved by the House as aforesaid.

That after the appointment of the general committee every member appointed shall continue to be a member of the committee until the end of that session of Parliament, or until he cease to be a member of the House of Commons, or until he resign his appointment (which he may do by letter to the Speaker), or until the general committee report that he is disabled by continued illness from attending the committee, or until the committee be dissolved, as hereinafter provided.

27. That in every case of vacancy in the general committee of elections the Speaker, on the first day on which the House meets after such vacancy is known by him, shall make known the vacancy to the House, and thereupon all proceedings of the general committee shall be suspended until the vacancy is supplied as hereinafter provided.

28. That if the general committee of elections at any time report to the House that, by reason of the continued absence of more than two of its members, or by reason of irreconcilable disagreement of opinion, the said committee is unable to proceed in the discharge of its duties, or if the House resolve that the general committee of elections be dissolved, the general committee shall be thereby forthwith dissolved.

29. That every appointment to supply a vacancy in the general committee, and every re-appointment of the general committee after the dissolution thereof, shall be made by the Speaker by warrant under his hand, laid upon the table of the House on or before the third day on which the House meets after the dissolution of the committee or notification of the vacancy (as the case may be); and the warrant shall be subject to the disapproval of the House in the like manner as is hereinbefore provided in the case of the first warrant for the appointment of the general committee; and upon any re-appointment of the general committee, the Speaker may, if he think fit, re-appoint any of the members of the former committee who are then willing and not disqualified to serve on it.

30. That the Speaker shall appoint the time and place of the first meeting of the general committee of elections, and the committee shall meet at the time and place so appointed; no member shall act upon such committee until he have worn at the table of the House, by the clerk, truly and said committee, to the best of his judgment and ability, without fear or favour.

31. That no business shall be transacted by the general committee of elections unless at the least four members thereof be then present together; and no appointment of a select committee by the general committee, to be made as hereinafter provided, shall be of force unless at the least four members then present of the general committee agree in the appointment.

32. That, subject to the provisions of this act, the general committee shall make regulations for the order and manner of conducting the business to be transacted by them.

33. That the general committee shall be attended by one of the committee clerks of the House selected for that purpose by the clerk of the House, and such committee clerk shall make a minute of all the proceedings of the committee, in such form and manner as shall be from time to time directed by the committee, and a copy of the minutes so kept shall be laid from time to time before the House of Commons.

34. That if at the time of the dissolution or suspension of the proceedings of the general committee of elections there be any business appointed to be transacted by such general committee on any certain day, the Speaker may adjourn the transaction of such business to such other day as to him seems convenient.

35. That every member more than sixty years old shall be wholly excused from serving on election committees, provided that on or before the reading over of the names of such excused members as hereinafter mentioned, or upon his afterwards becoming entitled to make such claim, he claim to be excused, by declaring in his place, or in writing under his hand delivered to the clerk at the table, that he is more than sixty years old; but no member shall be so excused who does not claim to be excused before he is chosen to serve, as hereinafter provided.

36. That in the first session of every Parliament, on the next meeting of the House after the last day allowed for receiving election petitions, and in every subsequent session on the next meeting of the House after the Speaker has laid on the table his warrant for the appointment of the general committee of elections, the clerk of the House shall read over the names of all the members who have so claimed to be excused.

37. That every member having leave of absence from the House shall be excused from serving on election committees during such leave; and if any member in his place offer any other excuse, either at the reading over of the said names or at any other time, the substance of the allegations shall be taken down by the clerk, in order that the same may be afterwards entered on the Journals, and the opinion of the House shall then be taken thereon; and if the House resolve that the member ought to be excused he shall be excused from serving on election committees for such time as to the House seems fit, but no member shall be so excused who does not claim to be excused before he is chosen to serve; and every member who has served on one election committee, and who within seven days after such committee has made its final report to the House, notifies to the clerk of the general committee his claim to be excused from so serving again, shall be excused during the remainder of the session, unless the House at any time resolve, upon the report of the general committee, that the number of members who have not so served is insufficient; but no member shall be deemed to have served on an election committee who on account of inability or accident has been excused from attending the same throughout.

38. That every member who is a petitioner complaining of an undue election or return, or against whose return a petition is depending, shall be disqualified to serve on election committees during the continuance of such ground of disqualification.

39. That the clerk of the House of Commons shall make out an alphabetical list of all the members, omitting the names of such members as have claimed to be wholly excused from serving on election committees as aforesaid; and the clerk shall also distinguish in such list the name of every member for the time being excused or disqualified, and shall also note in the list every cause of such temporary excuse or disqualification, and the duration thereof; and such list shall be printed, and distributed with the Votes of the House, and the names of all the members so omitted shall be also printed, and distributed with the Votes.

40. That during three days next after the day of the dis-ution of such corrected list further corrections may be made : such list by leave of the Speaker, if it appear that any name has been improperly left in or struck out of such list, or that there is any other error in such list.

41. That the list so finally corrected shall be referred to the general committee of elections; and the general committee shall thereupon select, in their discretion, six, eight, ten, or twelve members, whom they think duly qualified to serve as chairmen of election committees; and the members so selected shall be formed into a separate panel, to be called the chairmen's panel, which shall be reported to the House; and while the name of any member is upon the chairmen's panel he shall not be liable or qualified to serve on an election committee otherwise than as chairman; and every member placed on the chairmen's panel shall be bound to continue upon it till the end of the session, or until he sooner cease to be a member of the House, or until, by leave of the House, he be discharged from continuing upon the chairmen's panel: Provided always, that every member of the chairmen's panel who has served on one or more election committees, and who notifies to the clerk of the general committee of elections his claim to be discharged from continuing upon the chairmen's panel, shall be so discharged accordingly; and every such member shall be excused from serving upon any election committee, either as chairman or otherwise, during the remainder of the session; but no member of the chairmen's panel shall be deemed to have served on an election committee who on account of inability or accident has been excused from attending the same throughout.

42. That after the chairmen's panel has been so as aforesaid elected, the general committee shall divide the members then remaining on such list into five panels, in such manner as to them seems most convenient, but so nevertheless that each panel may contain as nearly as may be the same number of members, and they shall report to the House the division so made by them; and the clerk shall decide by lot at the table the order of the panels as settled by the general committee, and shall distinguish each of them by a number denoting the order in which they were drawn; and the panels shall then be returned to the general committee of elections, and shall be the panels from which members shall be chosen to serve on election committees.

43. That the general committee of elections shall correct the said panels from time to time by striking out of them the name of every member who ceases to be a member of the House, or who from time to time becomes entitled and claims as aforesaid to be wholly excused from serving on election committees, and by inserting in one of the panels to be chosen by the general committee, at their discretion, the name of every new member of the House not entitled and not having claimed as aforesaid to be wholly excused, and shall also from time to time distinguish in the manner aforesaid in the said panels the names of the members for the time being excused or disqualified for any of the reasons aforesaid; and the general committee shall, as often as they think fit, report to the House the panels as corrected; and as often as the general committee reports the said panels to the House they shall be printed, and distributed with the Votes.

44. That when leave of absence for a limited time has been granted by the House to any member, the general committee of elections may transfer the name of such member from the panel in which it has been placed to some other panel subsequent in rotation, if they think fit so to do, having regard to the length of time for which such leave of absence has been granted, and to the number of select committees then about to be appointed.

45. That whenever any member of the chairmen's panel ceases to be a member of the House, or is by leave of the House discharged from continuing upon the chairmen's panel, he is so discharged by reason of service under the provision herebefore contained, the general committee shall forthwith select another member to be placed upon the chairmen's panel in the room; and in case it at any time appear to the general committee that the chairmen's panel is too small, they may elect two, four, or six additional members to place upon it, so nevertheless that the chairmen's panel shall not at any time consist of more than eighteen members, without the leave of the House first obtained.

46. That all election petitions received by the House shall be referred by the House to the general committee of elections, for the purpose of choosing select committees, as hereinafter provided, to try such petitions; and the Speaker shall communicate to the House and to the general committee every report by the examiner of recognisances to him concerning the recognisances to any election petition; and in every case in which any election petition is withdrawn, or the examiner of recognisances reports to the Speaker that the recognisances are objectionable, the order for referring such petition to the general committee of elections shall be discharged, and no further proceeding shall be had upon such petition; and the general committee shall make out a list of all election petitions in which the examiner of recognisances has reported to the Speaker that the recognisances are unobjectionable, and in which the proceedings are not suspended, in which list the petitions shall be arranged in the order in which they were so reported upon; and in every case in which the proceedings in any petition inserted in such list are afterwards suspended the petition shall be struck out of the list, and shall be again inserted at the bottom of the list at the end of such suspension of proceedings.

47. That when notice of the death or vacancy of the seat of any member petitioned against, or that it is not the intention of such member to defend his election or return, is given to the general committee of elections by the Speaker, as hereinbefore provided, the general committee shall suspend their proceedings in the matter of the petition referred to in such notice, until twenty-one days after the day on which notice of such death or vacancy, or intention not to defend, has been inserted in the Gazette, under the provision hereinbefore contained, unless the petition of some person claiming to be admitted as a party in the room of such member be sooner referred to them.

48. That when more than one election petition relating to the same election or return are referred to the general committee of elections, they shall suspend their proceedings in the matter of all such petitions until the report of the examiner of recognisances upon each of such petitions, or such of them as have not been withdrawn, is received by them; and upon receipt of the last of such reports they shall place such petitions at the bottom of the then list of election petitions, bracketed together, and such petitions shall afterwards be dealt with as one petition.

49. That the general committee of elections shall choose the committees to try the election petitions standing in the said list of petitions in the order in which such petitions stand in such list, and they shall from time to time determine how many committees shall be chosen in each week for trying such petitions, and the days on which they will meet for choosing such committees, having regard to the number of select committees which may then be sitting for the trial of election petitions, and to the whole number of such committees then to be appointed, and they shall report to the House from time to time the days appointed by them for choosing such committees.

50. That if Parliament is prorogued after any election petition has been presented, but before the appointment of a select committee to try such petition, the general committee of elections appointed in the following session shall, within two days after their first meeting, in case the sureties have been then reported unobjectionable, appoint a day and hour for selecting a committee to try the petition so standing over as aforesaid: Provided always, that if the number of petitions so standing over be so great that the times for selecting committees to try the whole thereof cannot, in the judgment of the general committee, be conveniently appointed within two days after their first meeting, the said general committee shall, within two days after their first meeting, appoint the times for selecting committees to try so many of the said petitions as the said general committee deems convenient, and shall afterwards, from time to time, as soon as conveniently may be, appoint the times for selecting the committees to try the remainder of such petitions.

51. That notice of the time and place at which the committee will be chosen to try any election petition shall be published with the Votes, not less than fourteen days before the day on which such committee is appointed to be chosen; and in case the conduct of the returning officer is complained of, such notice shall be sent to him through the post, not less than fourteen days before the day on which such committee is appointed to be chosen; and every such notice shall direct all parties interested to attend the general committee of elections, by themselves or their agents, at the time and place appointed for choosing the select committee; and if (after any such notice has been published with the Votes, or sent to the returning officer as aforesaid) the proceedings in the matter of such petition become suspended, notice of such suspension shall be immediately published with the Votes; and in case the conduct of the returning officer is complained of, such notice shall be sent to him through the post.

52. Provided always, that if notice of the death or vacancy of the seat of any member petitioned against, or that it is not the intention of such member to defend his election or return, have been inserted in the Gazette by order of the Speaker, as hereinbefore provided, and no party has been admitted to defend such election or return, then, if the conduct of the returning officer is not complained of in such petition, it shall not be necessary to insert such petition at the bottom of the then list of petitions, but the general committee of elections shall meet for choosing the select committee to try such petition as soon as conveniently may be after the expiration of the time allowed for parties to come in to defend such election or return, and not less than one day's notice of the time and place appointed for choosing such committee shall be given in the Votes; and in such case it shall not be necessary to deliver to the clerk of the general committee of elections a list of the voters intended to be objected to, as hereinafter is required in other cases.

53. That the general committee of elections may change the day and hour appointed by them for choosing a select committee to try any election petition, and appoint some subsequent day and hour for the same, if in their judgment it be expedient so to do, giving notice in the Votes of the day and hour so subsequently appointed; and in every case in which any such change is made by them they shall forthwith report the same to the House, with their reasons for making such change.

54. That notice shall be published with the Votes of the petitions appointed for each week, and of the panel from which committees will be chosen to try such petitions, and each panel shall serve for a week, beginning with the panel first drawn, and continuing by rotation in the order in which they were drawn, and not reckoning those weeks in which no select committee is appointed to be chosen.

55. That the parties complaining of or defending the election or return complained of in any election petition shall, except in the case hereinbefore provided for, by themselves or their agents, deliver in to the clerk of the general committee lists of the voters intended to be objected to, giving in the said lists the several heads of objection, and distinguishing the same against the names of the voters excepted to, not later than six of the clock in the afternoon on the sixth day next before the day appointed for choosing the committee to try the petition complaining of such election or return; and the said clerk shall keep the lists so delivered to him in his office open to the inspection of all parties concerned.

56. That the general committee shall meet at the time and place appointed for choosing the committee to try any election petition, and shall choose from the panel in service four members, not being then excused or disqualified for any of the causes aforesaid, and not specially disqualified for being appointed on the committee to try such petition for any of the following causes; (that is to say), by reason of having voted at the election, or by reason of being the party on whose behalf the seat is claimed, or related to him or to the sitting member by kindred or affinity in the first or second degree according to the canon law.

57. That if at the least four members then present of the general committee of elections do not agree in choosing a committee to try any election petition the general committee shall adjourn the choosing of that committee, and of the remaining committees appointed to be chosen on the same day, to the following day, and the parties shall be directed to attend on the following day, or if such following day happen during an adjournment of the House, then on the day to which the House stands adjourned, and so from day to day until all such committees are chosen, or until the general committee of elections is dissolved, as hereinbefore provided; and the general committee shall not in any case proceed to choose a committee to try an election petition until they have chosen a committee to try every other election petition standing higher in the list aforesaid, the order for referring which has not been then discharged, except in the case where the day originally appointed for choosing a committee has been changed under the provision hereinbefore contained.

58. That on the day appointed by the general committee to choose an election committee the members upon the chairmen's panel shall select one of such members to act as the chairman of such election committee, and when they have been informed by the general committee that four members of such election committee have been chosen they shall communicate the name of the member so selected by them to the general committee; but no member shall be so selected who would be disqualified from serving on such committee if not upon the chairmen's panel: Provided always, that if, with reference to any petition for trying which they are about to appoint a chairman, the members of the chairmen's panel receive notice from the Speaker, under the provision hereinbefore contained, of the death or vacancy of the seat of the sitting member petitioned against in such petition, or that it is not his intention to defend his seat, they shall suspend their proceedings with regard to the appointment of a chairman to try such petition until the day appointed by the general committee of elections for selecting a committee to try such petition.

59. That the members upon the chairmen's panel may from time to time make such regulations as they find convenient for securing the appointment or selection of chairmen of election committees, and for distributing the duties of chairmen among all of them.

60. That as soon as the general committee of elections has chosen four members of a committee to try any election petition, and has received from the members of the chairmen's panel the name of a chairman to serve on such committee, the parties in attendance shall be called in, and the names of the members so chosen and of the chairman shall be read over to them.

61. That after hearing the said names the parties present shall be directed to withdraw, and the general committee may proceed to choose another committee to try the next petition appointed for that day, and so on until all the committees appointed to be chosen on that day are chosen, or until the choosing of any committee is adjourned as aforesaid; and after any such adjournment the general committee shall not transact any more business on that day, except with regard to those petitions for trying which committees have been previously chosen.

62. That within one half hour at farthest from the time when the parties to any election petition have withdrawn, or if the parties to any other election petition be then before the general committee of elections, then, after such other parties have withdrawn, the parties in attendance shall be again called before the general committee in the same order in which they were directed to withdraw; and the petitioners and sitting member, or such party as may have been admitted as counsel to defend the return or election, or their agents, beginning at the part of the petitioners, may object to all or any of the members chosen, or to the chairman, as being then disqualified or excused for any of the reasons aforesaid from serving on the committee for the trial of that election petition, but not for any other reason.

63. That if at the least four members then present of the general committee be satisfied that any member so objected to is then disqualified or excused for any of the reasons aforesaid, the parties present shall be again directed to withdraw, and the general committee shall proceed to choose from the same panel another committee to try that petition; or if the member to whom any such objection is substantiated be the chairman, they shall send back his name to the members on the chairmen's panel, and the members on the chairmen's panel shall proceed to choose another chairman to try that petition, and shall communicate his name to the general committee, and so as often as the case requires.

64. That in the second or any following committee the general committee may, if they think fit, include any of the members previously chosen by them to whom no objection has been substantiated; and no party shall be allowed to object to any member included in the second or any following committee who was not objected to when included in the committee first chosen to try that petition.

65. That when four members and a chairman have been chosen, to none of whom any objection has been substantiated, the clerk of the general committee of elections shall give notice thereof in writing to each of the members so chosen; and with every such notice shall be sent a notice of the general and special grounds of disqualification and excuse from serving hereinbefore mentioned, and of the time and place when and where the general committee will meet on the following day; and notice of the time and place of such meeting shall be published with the Votes.

68. That at or before four of the clock on the next day on which the House meets for the despatch of business after such report the five members chosen to be the select committee shall attend in their places, and shall before departing the House be sworn at the table by the clerk well and truly to try the matter of the petitions referred to them, and a true judgment to give according to the evidence, and shall be taken to be a select committee legally appointed to try and determine the merits of the return or election so referred to them by the House, and the legality of such appointment shall not be called in question on any ground whatever; and the member so appointed from the chairmen's panel shall be the chairman of such committee; and they shall not depart the House until the time for the meeting of such committee is fixed by the House, as hereinafter provided.

69. That if any member of the said select committee do not attend in his place within one hour after four of the clock on the day appointed for swearing the said committee, (provided the House sits so long, or if not, then within the like time on the following day of sitting), or if, after attending, any member depart the House before the said committee is sworn, unless the committee be discharged, or the swearing of the said committee be adjourned, as hereinafter provided, he shall be ordered to be taken into the custody of the Serjeant-at-arms attending the House, for such neglect of his duty, and shall be otherwise punished or censured, at the discretion of the House, unless it appear to the House, by facts specially stated, and verified upon oath, that such member was by a sudden accident or by necessity prevented from attending the House.

70. That if any such absent member be not brought into the House within three hours after four of the clock on the day first appointed for swearing the said committee, (provided the House sits so long, or if not, then within the like time on the following day of sitting), and if no sufficient cause be shewn to the House before its rising whereon the House dispenses with the attendance of such absent member, the swearing of the committee shall be adjourned to the next meeting of the House; and all the members of the said committee shall be bound to attend in their places, for the purpose of being sworn, on the day of the next meeting of the House, in like manner as on the day first appointed for that purpose.

71. That if on the day to which the swearing of the said committee is so adjourned all the members of the committee do not attend, and be sworn, within one hour after four of the clock, (provided the House sits so long, or if not, then within the like time of the following day of sitting), or if on the day first appointed for swearing the said committee sufficient cause be shewn to the House before its rising why the attendance of any member of the committee should be dispensed with, the said committee shall be taken to be discharged; and the general committee shall meet on the following day, or if such following day happen during an adjournment of the House, then on the day to which the House stands adjourned, and shall proceed to choose a new committee from the panel on service for the time being, in the manner hereinbefore provided, and notice of such meeting shall be published with the Votes.

That the House shall refer the petitions and lists annexed to the report of the general committee of elections to the select committee so appointed and sworn, and shall order the said select committee to meet at a certain time to be fixed by the House, which shall be within twenty-four hours of their being sworn at the table of the House, unless a Sunday, Christmas-day, or Good Friday intervene; and the place of their meeting shall be some convenient room or place adjacent to the House of Commons, properly prepared for that purpose.

73. That every such select committee shall meet at the time and place appointed for that purpose, and shall proceed to try the merits of the election petition so referred to them, and they shall sit from day to day, Sunday, Christmas-day, and Good Friday only excepted, and shall never adjourn for a longer time than twenty-four hours, unless a Sunday, Christmas-day, or Good Friday intervene, and in such case not for more than twenty-four hours, exclusive of such Sunday, Christmas-day, or Good Friday, without leave first obtained from the House, upon motion and special cause assigned for a longer adjournment; and if the House be sitting at the time to which such select committee is adjourned, then the business of the House shall be stayed, and a motion shall be made for a further adjournment for any time to be fixed by the House: Provided always, that if such select committee have occasion to apply or report to the House, and the House be then adjourned for more than twenty-four hours, such select committee may also adjourn to the day appointed for the meeting of the House.

75. That no member of any such select committee shall absent himself from the same without leave obtained from the House, or an excuse allowed by the House at the next sitting thereof, for the cause of sickness, verified upon the oath of his medical attendant, or for other special cause shewn and verified upon oath; and in every such case the member to whom such leave is granted or excuse allowed shall be discharged from attending, and shall not be entitled again to sit or vote on such committee; and such select committee shall never sit until all the members to whom such leave has not been granted, nor excuse allowed, are met; and in case all such members do not meet within one hour after the time appointed for the first meeting of such committee, or within one hour after the time to which such committee has been adjourned, a further adjournment shall be made, and reported to the House by their chairman, with the cause thereof.

76. That every member whose absence without leave or excuse is so reported shall be directed to attend the House at its next sitting, and shall then be ordered to be taken into the custody of the Serjeant-at-arms attending the House, for such neglect of his duty, and shall be otherwise punished or censured, at the discretion of the House, unless it appear to the House, by facts specially stated, and verified upon oath, that such member was, by a sudden accident or by necessity, prevented from attending the said select committee.

80. That all questions before the committee, if for the time being consisting of more than one member, shall be decided by a majority of voices; and whenever the voices are equal, the chairman shall have a second or casting voice; and no member of the committee shall be allowed to refrain from voting on any question on which the committee is divided.

84. That where in this act anything is required to be verified on oath to the House of Commons, it shall be lawful for the clerk of the House of Commons to administer an oath for that purpose, or an affidavit for such purpose may be sworn before any justice of the peace or Master of the High Court of Chancery.

85. 86. That every such select committee shall try the merits of the return or election complained of in the election petition referred to them, and shall determine by a majority of voices, if for the time being consisting of more than one member, whether the sitting members, or either of them, or any and what other person, were duly returned or elected, or whether the be void, or whether a new writ ought to issue, which determination shall be final between the parties to all intents and purposes; and the House, on being informed thereof by the committee, shall order such report to be entered in their Journals, and shall give the necessary directions for confirming or altering the return, or for ordering a return to be made, or for issuing a writ for a new election, or for carrying the said determination into execution, as the case may require.

87. That if any such select committee come to any resolution other than the determination above mentioned, they shall, if they think proper, report the same to the House for their opinion, at the same time that they inform the House of such determination, and the House may confirm or disagree with such resolution, and make such orders thereon as to them seems proper.

88. That if the Parliament be prorogued after the appointment of any select committee for the trial of any election petition, and before they have reported to the House their determination thereon, such committee shall not be dissolved by such prorogation, but shall be thereby adjourned to twelve of the clock on the day immediately following that on which Parliament meets again for the despatch of business, (Sunday, Good Friday, and Christmas-day always excepted); and all proceedings of such committee, and of any commission to take evidence issued under the authority of such committee, shall be of the same force and effect as if Parliament had not been prorogued; and such committee shall meet on the day and hour to which it is so adjourned, and shall thenceforward continue to sit from day to day in the manner hereinbefore provided, until they have reported to the House their determination on the merits of such petition.

89. That whenever any committee appointed to try an election petition reports to the House that such petition was frivolous or vexatious, the parties, if any, who have appeared before the committee in opposition to such petition, shall be entitled to recover from the persons, or any of them, who signed such petition, the full costs and expenses which such parties have incurred in opposing the same, such costs and expenses to be ascertained in the manner hereinafter directed.

90. That whenever such committee reports to the House that the opposition made to any such petition by any party appearing before them was frivolous or vexatious, the persons who signed such petition shall be entitled to recover from the party with respect to whom such report is made the full costs and expenses which such petitioners have incurred in prosecuting their petition, such costs and expenses to be ascertained in the manner hereinafter directed.

91. That whenever no party has appeared before any such committee in opposition to such petition, and such committee reports to the House that the election or return, or the session or insufficiency of a return, complained of in such petition, was vexatious or corrupt, the persons who signed such petition shall be entitled to recover from the sitting members (if any) whose election or return is complained of in such petition, (such sitting members not having given notice as aforesaid of their intention not to defend the same), or from any other persons admitted by the House as aforesaid to oppose such petition, the full costs and expenses which such petitioners have incurred in prosecuting their petition, such costs and expenses to be ascertained in the manner hereinafter directed.

92. That if any ground of objection be stated against any voter in any list of voters intended to be objected to as hereinbefore provided, and if such select committee be of opinion that such objection was frivolous or vexatious, they shall report the same to the House of Commons, together with their opinion on the other matters relating to the said petition, and the opposite party shall in such case be entitled to recover from the party on whose behalf any such objections were made the full costs and expenses incurred by reason of such frivolous or vexatious objections, such costs and expenses to be ascertained in the manner hereinafter directed.

93. That if either party make before the said select committee any specific allegation with regard to the conduct of the other party or his agents, and either bring no evidence in support thereof, or such evidence that the committee is of opinion that such allegation was made without any reasonable or probable ground, the committee may make such orders as to them seem fit for the payment, by the party making such unfounded allegation to the other party, of all costs and expenses incurred by reason of such unfounded allegation, such costs and expenses to be ascertained in the manner hereinafter directed.

94. That the costs and expenses adjudged by any such select committee as aforesaid to be paid, or which otherwise may become payable, under the provisions of this act or the said recited act of the eighth year of her Majesty, to any party prosecuting or opposing or preparing to oppose any election petition, or to any witness summoned to attend before any committee, under the provisions of this or the said recited act, shall be ascertained in manner following: (that is to say), on application made to the Speaker of the House of Commons by any such petitioner, party, or witness, for ascertaining such costs and expenses, not later than three calendar months after the determination of the merits of such petition, or after any order of the House for discharging the order of reference of such petition to the general committee of elections, or after the withdrawal of any petition as hereinbefore provided, the Speaker shall direct the same to be taxed by the examiner of recognisances or by the taxing officer of the House of Commons; and he said examiner or taxing officer shall examine and tax such costs and expenses, and shall report the amount thereof, together with the name of the party liable to pay the same, and the name of the party entitled to receive the same, to the Speaker, who shall, upon application made to him, deliver to the party a certificate, signed by himself, expressing the amount of the costs and expenses allowed in such report, with the name of the party liable to pay the same, and the name of the party entitled to receive the same; and such certificate so signed by the Speaker shall be conclusive evidence for all purposes whatever as well of the amount of the demand as of the title of the party therein named to recover the same from the party thereunto stated to be liable to the payment thereof; and the party claiming under the same shall, upon payment thereof, give a receipt at the foot of such certificate, which shall be a sufficient discharge for the same.

95. That the examiner of recognisances or the said taxing officer may examine upon oath any party claiming any such costs or expenses, and any witnesses tendered to him for examination, and may receive affidavits, sworn before him, or before any Master of the High Court of Chancery or any justice of the peace, relative to such costs or expenses.

96. That the party entitled to such taxed costs and expenses, or his or her executors or administrators, may demand the whole amount thereof, so certified as above, from any one or more of the persons liable to the payment thereof, and in case of non-payment thereof, on demand, may recover the same by action of debt in any of her Majesty's courts of record at Westminster or Dublin, or in the Court of Session in Scotland, in which action it shall be sufficient for the plaintiff to declare that the defendant is indebted to him in the sum mentioned in the said certificate; and the said plaintiff shall, upon filing the said declaration, together with the said certificate, and an affidavit of such demand as aforesaid, be at liberty to sign judgment as for want of plea by nil dicit, and take out execution for the said sum so mentioned in the said certificate, together with the costs of the said action, according to due course of law: Provided always, that the validity of such certificate (the handwriting of the Speaker thereunto being duly verified) shall not be called in question in any court.

97. That in every case it shall be lawful for any person from whom the amount of such costs and expenses have been so recovered to recover in like manner from the other persons, or any of them (if such there be) who are liable to the payment of the same costs and expenses, a proportionate share thereof, according to the number of persons so liable, and according to the extent of the liability of each person.

98. That if any person having subscribed an election petition presented under this act, or under the said recited act of the eighth year of the reign of her Majesty, neglect or refuse, for the space of seven days after demand, to pay to any witness summoned on his behalf before any committee under the provisions of this or the said recited act the sum so certified as aforesaid by the Speaker, under the authority of this or the said recited act, to be due to such witness, or if such petitioner neglect or refuse, for the space of six months after demand, to pay to any party opposing the said petition the sum so certified by the Speaker as aforesaid to be due to such party for his costs and expenses, and if such neglect or refusal be, within the year after the granting of such certificate, proved to the Speaker's satisfaction, by affidavit sworn before any Master of the High Court of Chancery (and such Master is hereby authorised to administer such oath, and is authorised and required to certify such affidavit under his hand), in every such case every person who has entered into a recognisance relating to such petition under the provisions of this or the said recited act shall be held to have made default in his said recognisance, and the Speaker of the House of Commons shall thereupon certify such recognisance into the Court of Exchequer in England, if the person who entered into such recognisance reside in England, or into the Court of Exchequer in Ireland if such person reside in Ireland, or into the Court of Exchequer in Scotland if such person reside in Scotland, and shall also certify that such person has made default therein, and such certificate shall be conclusive evidence of the validity of such recognisance and of such default; and the recognisance, being so certified, if the person who entered into such recognisance reside in England, shall be delivered by the clerk or one of the clerks assistant of the House of Commons into the hands of the Lord Chief Baron or one of the Barons of the Court of Exchequer in England, or of some officer appointed by the Court to receive the same, or if such person reside in Ireland or Scotland shall be transmitted through the post, in manner herein-after mentioned, to the Chief Baron of the Court of Exchequer in Ireland, or to one of the judges of the Court of Session discharging for the time the powers and duties of the Court of Exchequer in Scotland, as the case may require, and in every such case such delivery or transmission of such recognisance shall have the same effect as if the same were estreated from a court of law, and the validity of such certificate (the handwriting of the Speaker thereunto being duly verified) shall not be called in question in the said court.

99. That for the purpose of transmitting any such recognisance through the post as aforesaid, the clerk or one of the clerks assistant of the House of Commons, or some other person appointed by the Speaker for that purpose, shall carry such recognisance under a cover directed to the Lord Chief Baron or one of the barons of the Court of Exchequer in Ireland, or to one of the judges of the Court of Session discharging for the time the powers and duties of the Court of Exchequer in Scotland, as the case may require, to the General Post-office in London, and there deliver the same to the postmaster-general for the time being, or to such other person as the said postmaster-general shall depute to receive the same (and which deputation such postmaster-general is required to make), who on receipt thereof shall give an acknowledgment in writing of such receipt to the person from whom the same is received, and shall keep a duplicate of such acknowledgment, signed by the parties respectively to whom the same is so delivered; and the said postmaster-general shall despatch all such recognisances by the first post or mail after the receipt thereof to the person to whom the same is directed, accompanied with proper directions to the postmaster or deputy postmaster of the town or place to which the same is directed, requiring such postmaster or deputy postmaster forthwith to carry such recognisance, and to deliver the same to the person to whom the same is directed, who (or some officer appointed by the court for that purpose) is hereby required to give to such postmaster or deputy postmaster a memorandum in writing under his hand, acknowledging the receipt of every such recognisance, and setting forth the day and hour the same was delivered by such postmaster or deputy postmaster, which memorandum shall also be signed by such postmaster or deputy postmaster, and by him transmitted by the first or second post afterwards to the said postmaster-general, or his deputy, at the General Post-office in London.

100. That all monies which shall be received or recovered by reason or in pursuance of the estreating of any such recognisance as aforesaid shall, after deducting all expenses incurred in respect thereof, be forthwith paid by the proper officer for that purpose into the Bank of England, to the account of the Speaker and of the examiner of recognisances, and shall be applied by them, in manner hereinafter mentioned, in satisfaction, so far as the same will extend, of the costs and expenses intended to be secured by such recognisance.

101. That any person who has entered into any such recognisance may, before the same has been estreated, pay the sum of money for which he is bound by such recognisance into the Bank of England, to the account of the Speaker and the examiner of recognisances; and upon production to the examiner of recognisances of a bank receipt or certificate for the sum so paid in, he shall indorse on the recognisance in respect of which such money has been so paid in a memorandum of such payment, and thereupon such recognisance shall, so far as regards the person by or on whose behalf such money has been so paid, be deemed to be vacated, and shall not afterwards be estreated as against him, but such recognisance shall continue to be in force as regards any other person who has entered into the same.

102. That in every case in which any money is paid into the Bank of England to the account of the Speaker and the examiner of recognisances, as hereinbefore provided, a bank receipt or certificate of the amount so paid in shall be delivered to the examiner of recognisances by the person paying in the same, and such money shall, in the first place, and in such order of payment as the examiner of recognisances in his discretion, but with the approbation of the Speaker, thinks fit, be applied in satisfaction of all the costs and expenses for securing payment of which such investment was made, or so much thereof as can be thereby satisfied, and thereafter the residue (if any) shall be paid to or transferred to the account of the party by whom or on whose account the same was paid in.

103. That if any sheriff or other returning officer shall wilfully delay, neglect, or refuse duly to return any person who ought to be returned to serve in Parliament for any county, city, borough, district of burghs, port, or place within Great Britain or Ireland, such person may, in case it have been determined by a select committee appointed in the manner hereinbefore directed that such person was entitled to have been returned, sue the sheriff or other officer having so wilfully delayed, neglected, or refused duly to make such return at his election, in any of her Majesty's courts of record at Westminster or Dublin, or in the Court of Session in Scotland, and shall recover double the damages he has sustained by reason thereof, together with full costs of suit; provided such action be commenced within one year after the commission of the act on which it is grounded, or within six months after the conclusion of any proceedings in the House of Commons relating to such election.

104. That this act shall commence and take effect from the end of this session of Parliament.

105. That if at the close of the present session of Parliament there be any election petitions before the House, the order for taking which into consideration has not been discharged, and for trying which no committees have been appointed, such election petitions shall, in case the sureties relating thereto have been reported unobjectionable, be tried by committees to be chosen under the provisions of this act, and shall be referred to the general committee of elections before any petition presented in the next session; and the general committee shall, within two days after their first meeting, appoint a day and hour for selecting a committee to try every such petition; and if the present Parliament be prorogued after the appointment of a select committee for the trial of any such petition as aforesaid, and before they have reported to the House their determination thereon, such committee shall not be dissolved by such prorogation, but shall be adjourned in manner hereinbefore provided in the case in which Parliament is prorogued after the appointment of a select committee for the trial of an election petition, and before they have reported to the House their determination thereon; and in the case of all such petitions as aforesaid, all such further proceedings shall be had with reference thereto as if this act had been in force when such petitions were presented; and the recognisances entered into in respect of such petitions shall be taken to be and remain in force, and shall take effect for securing payment of all costs and expenses which the petitioners shall be liable to pay, as if the same had been entered into under the provisions of this act.

106. That no recognisance entered into, or affidavit sworn, under the provisions of this act, shall require to be impressed with any stamp.

107. That in citing this act it shall be sufficient in all cases to use the expression "The Election Petitions Act, 1848."

108. That in construing this act words importing the singular number only shall include the plural number, and words importing the plural number only shall include the singular, unless there be something in the subject or the context repugnant to such construction; and the words "oath" and "affidavit" respectively shall mean affirmation in the case of Quakers, or any declaration lawfully substituted for an oath in the case of persons allowed by law to make a declaration instead of taking an oath.

109. That this act may be amended or repealed by any act to be passed in this session of Parliament.

2. Not to affect Appeals of which Notice has been given.

Whereas by an act passed in the 9 & 10 Vict. LONDON, OCTOBER 21, 1848.

We imagine that few persons will be hardy enough to commence an action against a magistrate for any act done by him in the execution of his office, since the passing of the recent statute to protect justices "from vexatious actions," (11 & 12 Vict. c. 44). Previous to its enactment, there were many difficulties in the way of successfully prosecuting a suit against magistrates, they had been carefully hedged round by legislative protection; and we remember an eminent pleader who had made in his note book the following entry, as the result of his experience:—"Mem. General rule for action—no remedy against a justice!"

Within the last few years, however, they have been frequently attacked with success in our courts of law; many instances these attacks have, no doubt, been successful, and if the magistrate obtained a verdict, he was then found that he could not obtain his costs. The ground of action has been generally, if not invariably, some formal defect in the conviction, order, or warrant, and no doubt whether, in any one of the cases, it could have been shewn that the party convicted was not guilty of the offence imputed to him, or that the magistrate had been actuated by malice.

The new act, however, provides, that where a magistrate has acted within his jurisdiction, malice and the absence of reasonable and probable cause must be proved by the plaintiff; and that where he has acted without or beyond his jurisdiction, if it be shewn that a sum levied was due, or, in case of imprisonment, that the plaintiff was guilty of the offence, and underwent no greater punishment than that assigned by law to it, he shall recover only 2*s.* damages, and not any costs. (Sects. 1, 13).

We consider that gentlemen, who gratuitously devote their time and services to the administration of justice, should receive due protection from the law against the annoyance and expense of actions founded on merely formal defects in their proceedings; and we think this new statute most effectually gives such protection. By many persons it is considered to go too far in that direction: one of its provisions, namely, that which enables a magistrate to object to be sued in the county court, (sect. 10), seems to create an invidious distinction between him and other subjects of the realm, and it will often operate hardly upon the poor man (the usual plaintiff in such cases) to be compelled, at the defendant's pleasure, to resort to the superior courts; and this, after he has issued his summons, which is the chief expense in the county court.

We now propose to analyse the provisions of the statute, offering such comment as they may suggest. The act came into force on the 2nd of this month, (sect. 15), and it extends only to England, Wales, and Berwick-upon-Tweed. (Sect. 16).

It first relates to acts within the jurisdiction of the justice, done by him in the execution of his duty as such justice, and provides, that, for such acts, the action shall be on the case, as for a tort, and in the declaration it shall be expressly alleged that such act was done maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause; and if at the trial, upon the general issue being pleaded, the plaintiff fail to prove such allegation, he shall be nonsuit, or a verdict shall be given for the defendant. (Sect. 1). See Burley v. Bethune, (5 Taunt. 580), as to the evidence of want of probable cause for a conviction.

Next, as to an act done by a justice in a matter of which by law he has not jurisdiction, or in which he exceeds it. The action may be in the same form and same case as before the passing of the statute. But, if it be for anything done under a conviction or order, the conviction must have been first quashed, or the order peal or application to the Queen's Bench; so, if for anything done under a warrant issued to procure the appearance of the party, and followed by a conviction or order; if the warrant shall not have been so followed, or if it be on an information for an alleged indictable offence, yet, if a summons were issued previously to the warrant, and served on such person personally, or by leaving such summons for him with some person at his last or most usual place of abode, and he did not appear according to the exigency thereof, no action shall be maintained against such justice for anything done under such warrant. (Sect. 2).

And in all cases where the plaintiff shall be entitled to recover, and shall prove the levying or payment of any penalty or money, under a conviction or order, as parcel of the damages he seeks to recover; or if he prove that he was imprisoned under it, and seek to recover damages for such imprisonment, he shall not recover the amount of such penalty or money, or any sum beyond 2*l.*, as damages, for such imprisonment, or any costs of suit, if it be proved that he was actually guilty of the offence, or was liable by law to pay the sum so ordered to be paid, and (with respect to such imprisonment) that he has undergone no greater punishment than that assigned by law for the offence, or for non-payment of the sum. (Sect. 13).

This last provision is taken from 43 Geo. 3, c. 141, ss. 1, 2, but that statute did not extend to cases where the conviction had not been quashed, nor where the magistrate had acted without jurisdiction.

If a conviction or order be made by one justice, and a warrant granted thereon by another, bonâ fide, and without collusion, the action (if any) for any defect in the conviction or order, or for want of jurisdiction in making the same, must be brought against the former justice. (Sect. 3).

If a poor-rate be made, allowed, and published, and a warrant of distress issue thereon, against any person named and rated therein, no action lies against the justice who granted the warrant, by reason of any defect in the rate, or of such person not being liable to be rated therein. (Sect. 4).

In all cases where a discretionary power is given to a justice by statute, no action lies for the manner in which he has exercised his discretion in the execution of such power. (Ib.) (See R. v. Young, 1 Burr. 561; Bassett v. Godschall, 3 Wils. 121).

If a justice refuse to do any act relating to the duties of his office, the party requiring it to be done may apply to the Court of Queen's Bench, on an affidavit of facts, for a rule, calling on the justice and the party to be affected by such act, to shew cause why it should not be done, and if, after due service of the rule, good cause be not shewn, the Court may make it absolute, with or without, or on payment of costs; and the justice, on being served with the rule absolute, must obey it, and no action lies against him for having obeyed it. (Sect. 5).

If a conviction or order, before or after a warrant has been granted on it, be confirmed on appeal, no action shall be brought against the justice granting the warrant, for anything done under it by reason of any defect in the conviction or order. (Sect. 6).

If, in any of the cases where an action is prohibited by the act, it be brought, a judge of the court in which it is brought may, on application of defendant, and on affidavit of facts, set aside the proceedings, with or without costs. (Sect. 7).

No action shall be brought against a justice for anything done in the execution of his office, unless the same be commenced within six calendar months next after the act complained of shall have been committed. (Sect. 8).

The corresponding section in 24 Geo. 2, c. 44, s. 8. The day on which the act was done is not to be included in the six months. (Hardy v. Ryle, 9 B. & C. 603). Where the cause of action is a continuing one, by imprisonment, the action may be brought within six calendar months after the last day of imprisonment. (Ib.; Massey v. Johnson, 12 East, 67; and see Weston v. Fournier, 14 East, 491).

No action shall be commenced against a justice until one calendar month at least after a notice in writing of such intended action shall have been delivered to him, or left for him at his usual place of abode by the party intending to commence such action, or by his attorney or agent, in which said notice the cause of action and the court in which the same is to be brought shall be clearly and explicitly stated, and the name and place of the abode of such party shall be indorsed thereon, and also the name and place of abode or business of the said attorney or agent, if such notice be served by such attorney or agent. (Sect. 9).

By stat. 24 Geo. 2, c. 44, s. 1, notice of the intended writ or process was required, in which should be contained "the cause of action."

The venue shall be laid in the county, or in action in the county court within the district, where the act was committed. (Sect. 10).

Stat. 21 Jac. 1, c. 12, s. 5, is to the same effect.

The defendant may plead the general issue, and give any special matter of defence, excuse, or justification in evidence under it. (Sect. 10).

So, in stat. 21 Jac. 1, c. 12, s. 5. "By statute" must be inserted on the margin. (Reg. Gen. Trin. 1 Vic.)

No action shall be brought in the county court against a justice for anything done by him in the execution of his office, if he object thereto; and if, within six days after being served with a summons, he or his attorney or agent give a written notice of such objection, all subsequent proceedings in such county court in such action shall be void. (Sect. 10.)

Before action the justice may tender amends; and after action, at any time before issue joined, he may pay money into court, and he may give the tender and payment into court, or either, in evidence under the general issue; and if the jury be of opinion that the plaintiff is not entitled to damages beyond such sum, they shall give a verdict for the defendant, and the plaintiff shall not be at liberty to be nonsuited; and so much of the said sum of money as shall be sufficient to pay the defendant's costs shall be paid out to him, and the residue, if any, to the plaintiff; or, if plaintiff elect to accept such sum so paid in, he may obtain an order for that purpose and for his costs, and such order shall be a bar to any future action for the same cause. (Sect. 11).

To a similar effect is 24 Geo. 2, c. 44, ss. 2, 3. Even after issue joined, the Court have allowed, and would, it seems, still allow, the defendant to withdraw his plea, pay money into court, and plead de novo. (Nestor v. Newcombe, 3 B. & C. 169; Devaynes v. Boys, 7 'aunt. 33).

If the plaintiff do not prove that the action was brought within the proper time, or due notice given, or the cause of action as stated therein, or that such cause arose in the county or district as aforesaid, then it shall be nonsuited, or a verdict shall pass against him. (Sect. 12).

See 24 Geo. 2, c. 44, ss. 3, 5, and 12 Jac. 1, c. 12, s. 5.

If plaintiff succeed he shall be entitled to costs as before the act; but if he has in such case alleged malice and want of reasonable and probable cause, he shall be entitled to his full costs, to be taxed as between attorney and client. (Sect. 13).

In such case double costs were allowed until the stat. 6 & 6 Vict. c. 97. See 24 Geo. 2, c. 44, s. 7.

In every action against a justice for anything done in the execution of his office, if the defendant obtain judgment on verdict or otherwise, he shall be entitled to full costs as between attorney and client. (Sect. 13.)

The act is to apply for the protection of all persons or anything done in the execution of their office, in all cases in which the provisions of any of the statutes repealed by the act (sect. 17) would have been applicable. (Sect. 18).

The acts repealed wholly or in part are 7 Jac. 1, c. 5; 11 Jac. 1, c. 12; 24 Geo. 2, c. 44; 43 Geo. 3, c. 141).

"There is something eminently practical in the general aspect of the book; it is small, compact of print and law, and clearly arranged and set forth."—The Jurist.

"No turf-man, betting-man, horse-dealer, stable-keeper, or in fact any other description of horseman will be able to get on in his business without this book."—The Veterinarian.

"This a most useful book, edited by Mr. G. H. H. Oliphant, a Barrister, and embraces every matter in which the Horse is concerned. Every question is treated of with clearness and accuracy, and the law as it exists is explained and demonstrated by recent decisions in the Courts of law. The question respecting Derby Clubs and their legality forms a prominent portion of the work, and we unfeignedly recommend its possession to all interested in the numerous subjects on which it treats."—the Life.

SOME conflict of authority exists on the question whether the Court of Chancery will, in appointing new trustees, insert in the conveyance to the trustees so appointed, a power to appoint new trustees. In a recent case, (White v. White, 5 Beav. 221), the will, under which it was desired to appoint new trustees, contained power to the trustees to appoint new ones; and the Master of the Rolls directed that such a power should be inserted in the conveyance. In a still more recent case, (Oglander v. Oglander, 12 Jur. 786), the settlement under which trustees were to be appointed, contained the power of new appointment; but his Honor, the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, refused to direct the insertion of such a power in the conveyance, observing, with reference to White v. White, that that case went rather than he should like to go. In Bayley v. Mansell, (4 Madd. 226), Sir J. Leach, V.C., refused to direct the insertion of such a power, because there was no provision to that effect in the original trust deed; hence it may be inferred that he would have thought the existence of such a provision in the trust deed, would have justified its insertion in the conveyance to the trustees appointed by the Court.

Brown v. Brown (3 You. & C. 395) was consistent with Oglander v. Oglander. In that case it appears, from the observations of counsel, that there was in the will under which the appointment was to be made, a power of new appointment; nevertheless the Court refused to insert it in the conveyance.

Bayley v. Mansell was referred to as against the application. That case, however, as we have seen, was decided on the ground that there was no power of new appointment in the original instrument of trust; and though it cannot be said to be an authority for the position that where such a power is in the original instrument, the Court will insert it in a conveyance to new trustees, neither is it an authority for the position that the Court will not insert the power if it is found in the original instrument.

Sampayo v. Gould (12 Sim. 426) does not appear, having regard to the facts, to be in point; but the Court threw out observations which seem to lay down a principle applicable to the question under discussion. In that case the decree of the Court was sought to carry into effect a foreign marriage contract, which appointed trustees, and directed that it should be carried into full effect according to the laws of England; and there was nothing in the contract to exclude the introduction of a power of appointing new trustees. The Court decreed a settlement with all usual and customary clauses and powers, having regard to the provisions of the contract, and directed the appointment of trustees in place of the original ones. The Master inserted a power to appoint new trustees; and the question was, whether that was right. On this point the Court said, "With respect to the power to appoint new trustees, upon the face of the decree it appears that two of the original trustees are dead, and that another of them is desirous to retire from the trust; and the decree refers it to the Master to appoint three proper persons to be trustees of the trust property in their stead. And it appears to me that as the Court has thus sanctioned the appointment of new trustees in lieu of the two who were dead, (a matter that could not be avoided), and in lieu of one whom the Court allows at his own request to retire, the Court can sanction the appointment of new trustees in future cases where it may be necessary."

It is not quite clear, whether the Court was here intended to confine the doctrine laid down, by reference to the particular case, or to lay down the broad principle, that, as incident to its power of appointing trustees, the Court has the power of delegating to them the power of appointing new ones from time to time. If the latter is the doctrine intended, it certainly goes beyond any of the other decided cases.

The language of Mr. Baron Alderson in Brown v. Brown, (3 You. & C. 365, cited sup.), is, that there is no foundation in principle for such an application, and there was then no authority. It would seem indeed strange—unless the Court has the general power pointed at by the dictum referred to in Sampayo v. Gould, that, under the usual power in an instrument of trust, authorising A. and B. and the survivors of them, or his executors, administrators, or even his assigns, to appoint new trustees—the Court should have power to give to persons who fill none of the characters designated, the power contained in the original instrument. If the Court has indeed a general power, on appointing trustees, to give them all usual powers, of course there is an end of the question; but such a power would amount to that of creating trusts, not of merely carrying into effect the trusts designated specially or indirectly by the settlor, and such an extent of jurisdiction the Court has never attempted to claim. Upon principle, then, it would seem that the Court cannot give to trustees appointed by it any powers, except such as are given by the settlement to persons so described as a class, as to include the trustees appointed by the Court; and the balance of authority is clearly in favour of this doctrine. If, however, the original instrument of trust should contain, according to a practice now frequent in the power of appointing new trustees, the words “any trustees or trustees for the time being of this instrument,” then, we apprehend, the Court would, on appointing new trustees, insert in the conveyance a power of new appointment, if indeed it should not hold that the trustees would have such powers under the provision of the original instrument.

OBSERVATIONS ON THE LANDS CLAUSES CONSOLIDATION ACT, 8 Vict. c. 18.

This act, which was intended to settle the general frame of Railway Company Acts, was intended also, no doubt, to be perfectly clear and definite in its explanation of the rights and powers of companies, and those with whom they deal. Nevertheless, it is in one of its most important sections obscure on a material point.

The 7th section is as follows:—“It shall be lawful for all parties being seised, possessed of, or entitled to any such lands, or any estate or interest therein, to sell and convey or release the same to the promoters of the undertaking, and to enter into all necessary agreements for that purpose, and particularly it shall be lawful for all or any of the following parties so seised, possessed, or entitled as aforesaid, so to sell, convey, or release (that is to say) all corporations, tenants in tail or for life, married women seised in their own right or entitled to dower, guardians, committees of lunatics and idiots, trustees or feoffees in trust for charitable or other purposes, executors and administrators, and all parties for the time being entitled to the receipt of the rents and profits of any such lands in possession, or subject to any estate in dower, or to any lease for life or for lives, and year or for years, or any less interest; and the power so to sell and convey or release as aforesaid may lawfully be exercised by all such parties (other than married women entitled to dower), or lessees for life or for lives, or year or for years, or for any less interest, not only on behalf of themselves and their respective heirs, executors, administrators, and successors, but also for or on behalf of every person entitled in reversion, remainder, or expectancy after them, or in defeasance of the estates of such parties; and as to such married women, whether they be of full age or not, as if they were sole and of full age; and as to such guardians on behalf of their wards; and as to such commissioners on behalf of such lunatics and idiots of whom they are the committees respectively, and that to the same extent as such wives, wards, lunatics, and idiots respectively could have exercised the same power, under the authority of this or the special act, if they had respectively been under no disability; and as to such trustees, executors, and administrators, on behalf of their cestui que trusts, whether infants, issue unborn, lunatics, femmes covert, or other persons, and that to the same extent as such cestui que trusts respectively could have exercised the same powers under the authority of this and the special act if they had respectively been under no disability.”

Now, upon this section, it seems not perfectly clear who are the parties who are competent to sell and convey, when lands are settled in trust, under certain circumstances.

The persons to whom, by express words, the power to sell and convey is given, are persons under some species of disability, that is, not merely general disability to convey, but particular disability to convey the lands intended to be sold; in other words, persons who could not at all, or could not alone, sell and convey without the authority of the act. The power given to such persons to sell and convey extends (with the particular exception of married women entitled to dower, lessees for life or years, or a less interest) to the estates of themselves and their heirs and executors, or other representatives, and to the estates of those in reversion, remainder, or expectancy; but it should seem that the power is only to be exercised independently by persons representing others, such as committees, executors, or trustees, where the cestui que trustant are under disability, because the clause declares, not that the persons designated may exercise the power to the same extent as the cestui que trustant might, but to the same extent as the cestui que trustant might have exercised it, if they had not been under any disability. One question, then, is, whether, if there be lands in trust, on trust for parties who are sui juris, the proper persons to sell and convey are the cestui que trustant, or the trustees, or both.

The first part of the clause, if construed liberally, would include every person having any estate, legal or equitable, in the lands; so that, under it, an equitable tenant for life sui juris might sell and convey the lands. Then, what would be the effect of his conveyance? By the subsequent words, it would operate on behalf of him for all his estate, and on behalf of the reversioner, remainder-man, or expectant owner. But is it intended that it should enure to carry the legal estate? We apprehend not, because there are no other words in the clause extending the operation of the conveyance, and the trustees would clearly not fall within the description of either remainder-men, reversioners, or those entitled in expectancy. On the other hand, in such a case, or even in a case where the equitable fee was in a cestui que trust sui juris, could the trustees sell and convey alone? This is certainly more doubtful. The clause gives to trustees for any purpose, power to sell and convey, directing that they may exercise such power on behalf of themselves and their heirs, &c., and on behalf of their cestui que trustant; and were it not for the concluding paragraph, there can be no doubt that trustees might in any case sell and convey every particle of the estate. But the concluding paragraph, extending the power to the trustees, we apprehend, limits the power to the trustees, and not to the above to the extent to which his cestui que trust might convey if not under disability, seems to shew that persons seized of the legal estate only, can only convey on behalf of their cestuis que trustent when those cestuis que trustent are under disability; and we should conclude that the act will probably be held to intend, that, whenever there are beneficial owners sui juris, they must join in the sale and conveyance in order to make a good title.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 4, 1848.

Among the important statutes passed at the close of the last session is one brought in by Mr. Baines, Q. C., or the "Removal of Defects in the Administration of Criminal Justice." (11 & 12 Vict. c. 46). Its objects may be briefly stated to be the following:—To render accessories before the fact to felony liable to be tried as principals; accessories after the fact to be tried, without or before the principal; the prisoner to be charged on the same indictment both as the thief and the receiver; and variances between writing or print and an indictment for any offence to be amended.

We propose now to consider its provisions more in detail.

The act came into force in August last, and it is not to extend to Scotland.

First, it is well known that there are accessories only to a felony; in treason and misdemeanor all are principals. Formerly accessories could not, without their own consent, unless tried with the principal, be put on their trial before the principal had been convicted or outlawed. With regard to accessories before the fact, this has been altered by stat. 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, ss. 9, 11, whereby they may be tried for a substantive felony, whether the principal has been convicted or not, or is amenable to justice or not. But, if indicted with the principal, and the latter pleaded any plea but the general issue, the accessory was not bound to answer until such plea had been determined; and if the general issue were pleaded, the jury were charged to inquire first of the principal, (1 Hale, 624), and if the principal did not appear at the trial, the accessory was bound to plead. (Reg. v. Ashmall, 9 C. & P. 236). Now, however, accessories before the fact to any felony, common law or statutory, may be indicted, tried, convicted, and punished in all respects, as if they were principal felons, (sect. 1), and accessories after the fact (extending 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, ss. 9 & 11, to them) may be indicted and convicted, together with the principal, or after his conviction, or may be indicted and convicted of a substantive felony, (whether the principal shall or shall not have been previously convicted, or shall or shall not be amenable to justice), and may, thereupon, be punished in like manner as any accessory after the fact to the same felony, if convicted as an accessory, and the offence of such person may be tried, &c. by any court which shall have jurisdiction to try the principal as if the accessorial act had been committed at the same place as the principal felony; provided that such person once duly tried for such offence shall not be tried again for the same offence. (Sect. 2).

Secondly, it was considered improper to include in the same indictment counts for stealing property and for receiving it knowing it to be stolen. (R. v. Galloway, 1 Moo. C. C. 234; R. v. Flower, 3 C. & P. 413; R. v. Madden, 1 M. C. C. 277). If included the prosecutor was put to his election; but now, where such indictment is found, the prosecutor shall not be put to his election, but the jury may find a verdict of guilty either of stealing or of receiving the property; and if two or more be so indicted, the jury may find all or any of them guilty either of stealing or of receiving it, knowing it to have been stolen, or find one or more of them guilty of stealing, and the others guilty of receiving. (Sect. 3). With regard to this section, a contemporary remarks, "A question may arise upon the words, 'it shall be lawful for the jury to find a verdict of guilty either of stealing the property or of receiving it, knowing it to have been stolen.' Do these words authorise the finding of an alternative verdict, as, e. g., 'We find A. B. guilty either of stealing the property, or of receiving it knowing it to have been stolen,' or do they only confer upon the jury, after the whole case has been left to them, an option of finding a verdict of guilty of stealing, or a verdict of guilty of receiving, whichever they may consider best supported by the evidence? The latter we should consider to be the true construction; but, looking closely at the words of the clause, we imagine the former interpretation might well be contended for; and we cannot help thinking, that, until the question be set at rest by a judicial decision, it is a fairly disputable point." (Law Magazine for November, 1848, p. 274).

Thirdly, by 9 Geo. 4, c. 15, judges at Nisi Prius and courts of oyer and terminer and general gaol delivery were empowered to amend the record, upon which any trial might be pending, in any indictment for any misdemeanor, where any variance appeared between any matter in writing or in print, produced in evidence, and the recital or setting forth thereof upon the record.

This provision is now extended, totidem verbis, to indictments or informations "for any offence whatever." (Sect. 4). The decisions under the former statute will be applicable, therefore, to this. It will be seen, that neither of these enactments applies to the amendment of indictments preferred at the quarter sessions, but that they are both confined to courts of oyer and terminer and general gaol delivery.

THE question which caused so much excitement and anxiety at the beginning of this term on the equity side of Westminster Hall, with reference to the locale of the future sittings of the Court of Chancery, is understood to be left open by the Lord Chancellor and the other Judges of the Court, as to the sittings following the vacation sittings between Hilary and Easter Terms; it being determined, that, for this term and the next, and the vacation sittings appertaining to them, the Court of Chancery sits at Lincoln's Inn.

We propose, here, shortly to examine the grounds for the different plans which have been suggested, not assuming that the convenience of the junior Bar alone should be consulted, nor taking it for granted that it will not receive due consideration at the hands of the learned head of the Profession.

The plan most generally contended for of late years has been, that the sittings should be permanently held at Lincoln's Inn; the next is, that the sittings should be permanently at Westminster; the third, and that which seems most likely to be carried into effect, that the sittings should during the recess of Parliament be at Lincoln's Inn, and that during the sitting of Parliament they should be at Westminster, as of old, in term, and in vacation at Lincoln's Inn.

The arguments, derived exclusively from considerations of practical convenience in the transaction of business, are unquestionably in favour of this plan. All the offices are in the locality of Lincoln's Inn; so are all the chambers of counsel; so is a very large proportion of the offices of solicitors practising in Chancery. At any rate, those offices are almost without exception nearer to Lincoln's Inn than to Westminster. There cannot be a doubt that the time and comfort of the majority of those who are professionally engaged in Chancery business are consulted, by the concentration of all these elements of its transaction in a circle of small radius. All the facts bearing on this part of the question, and all the arguments deducible from them, are, however, so well known, that we shall not dwell upon them. But with regard to the particular question of the convenience of the Equity Bar, there has been considerable generality, and, as a consequence, considerable mystification in the statements and arguments put forth. With regard to Queen's counsel, we apprehend it must be to them a matter of great indifference whether the sittings are held at Lincoln's Inn or at Westminster. Their duties, while the Court is sitting, are entirely in Court. They can, when not actually engaged, read briefs and cases as well in Court as any where else. At any rate, they must be in Court; and their chamber business is not more stopped by the Court sitting in one place than in another.

With the junior counsel the case is different; but when it is asserted generally, that the convenience of the junior Bar is increased by the sittings being held at Lincoln's Inn; or, rather, when it is asserted, that by the sittings being held at Westminster, the junior Bar is greatly damaged, we apprehend the assertion is not accurate. The junior Bar is divided into three principal classes. The first, very small in number, consists of less than a dozen men, who are overwhelmed with business,—taken into court almost as continually as Queen's counsel, and loaded with an immense quantity of drawing besides. Gentlemen thus situated are scarcely more inconvenienced by the sittings being held at Westminster than are Queen's counsel, because, let the Court sit where it will, they never can contrive to get a single half hour of quiet in their chambers during the sitting of the Court. Let any one watch the course of any of the great juniors of the day, or recollect the time when he was the pupil of such a one, and say whether this position is not strictly correct. The second, a much larger class, consists of those who have a very considerable business in advising upon and drawing pleadings, combined with a moderate share of business in court. To these and to those only there is a real and considerable inconvenience consequent upon attending the courts at Westminster; for, to the third and largest class, composed of those who have very little business of any kind, and a certain abundance of time in chambers, it cannot in the least matter where the business, in which they take scarcely any part, is transacted.

The convenience, then, of the junior Bar, as connected with this question, means the convenience of only a moderate number of its members; at the same time it means the convenience of a body to whom a very large and important portion of all the business of the suitors is entrusted; of a body, therefore, whose convenience is not easily to be separated from that of the litigant public.

On grounds, then, of convenience with reference to the merely practical question of the transaction of business with the least waste of time, it seems probable that the permanent sittings of the Courts of Equity at Lincoln's Inn would be the most advantageous. But there are other considerations besides the mere apparent convenience of either the junior Bar, or of the solicitors practising in Chancery. From time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, the equity as well as the law sittings have been held in term at Westminster Hall. The law sittings must still continue to be there held; and there is a prestige,—an odour of the sanctity of times past,—hanging about the sittings in the Old Hall of Westminster, which is not altogether without its value, at least in a country where there are still traditions venerable and venerated.

Westminster Hall is, in the public mind, more known, more consecrated as the arena of forensic exhibition of talent, than any other place; and the entire removal therefrom of a branch of the Bar, is not unaccompanied with danger of a withdrawal from the public gaze—most ruinous to its interests, and to the interest of those whom it represents. The attendance, too, at Westminster of the Equity Bar, though there is, in fact, but little intercourse between it and the Bar attending the Courts of Common Law, still tends to maintain a community of interest in idea and feeling, if not in actual business and practice, between the two branches of the Bar. So long as we attend at Westminster, we are a part of the Bar of England; the Equity men fraternize, if we may use the language of our republican neighbours, with the men of the Common Law. But, if we of the Equity Bar should be wholly confined to Lincoln's Inn, there will be a total separation; we shall be a semi-ecclesiastical Bar—doomed to an existence semi-monastic in the eyes of the public, and hence deprived of a portion of our influence and a portion of our usefulness. These may be reasons depending for their validity on matters of imagination and tradition; but while the world still reverences traditions, it may be unwise to disconnect from them, institutions depending partly for their power and influence upon the public respect.

The union of practical convenience and of those advantages which depend upon prestige and upon the preservation of the unity of the Bar, seems most likely to be attained by the plan, of which the first part has been executed by the Chancellor, viz. the sitting of the Equity Courts at Lincoln's Inn during the winter terms and vacations; and partly at Westminster and partly at Lincoln's Inn, as of old, during the remainder of the year. If this plan should be adopted, there will be, probably, a gain to the public, in the expedition of business during a part of the year; a reconciliation of the various interests, actually or supposed to be conflicting, of the Courts, the senior and junior Bar, and the suitors and their solicitors; and the securing to the Equity Bar of the advantage resulting from its being relieved from some practical inconvenience, without condemning it to the obscurity of Lincoln's Inn, and sinking it in the oblivion which almost always falls upon a detached and exclusive body of professional men.

CROWN CASES RESERVED.

The new Court of Appeal in Criminal Cases, under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 78, the object of which is to provide a better mode than that hitherto in use of deciding any difficult Question of Law which may arise in any Court of Oyer and Terminer and Gaol Delivery, and to enable Courts of Quarter Sessions to reserve Questions of Law, will sit for the first time this day. The 3rd section of the statute provides, that the jurisdiction and authorities conferred upon the judges by this act, may be exercised by a quorum of five of the justices of either Bench and Barons of the Exchequer, of whom the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench, the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, or the Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer, shall be one. The Court will, this term, consist of the Lord Chief Baron, Mr. Baron Alderson, Mr. Justice Maule, Mr. Justice Creswell, and Mr. Justice Erle. According to the former practice, Crown Cases Reserved were argued before a majority of the judges. By the stat. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 78, Courts of Quarter Sessions are, for the first time, empowered to reserve questions of law for the consideration of the judges; but in all cases it is left to the discretion of the judge, or commissioner, or justices of the peace, before whom the case on which the question has arisen, may have been tried, whether the point shall be reserved or not. One of the most important alterations in the practice effected by the new act is the provision in the 3rd section, that, in future, the Judgments shall be delivered in open court, after hearing counsel, or the parties, in like manner as the judgments of the Superior Courts of Common Law at Westminster or Dublin are now delivered.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Nov. 7.—The Special Paper and Demurrer Paper will not be taken during the term.

The New Trial Paper will be taken on Mondays and Thursdays after motions; and on Tuesdays and Fridays the New Trial Paper will be taken instead of the Special Paper.

CLERICAL, MEDICAL, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.—INVALID LIVES.

In addition to the ordinary Assurance of Healthy Lives, this Society, early in the year 1824, originated the plan of granting Policies on the Lives of Persons more or less deviating from the standard of health.
Having issued one-fourth of the whole number of Policies on Lives of that description, the Board have recently caused a careful investigation into this branch of the business to be made. The result of this investigation has proved highly satisfactory as to the past, and encouraging for the future. The data, derived from long experience in this class of case, and exclusively available by this Society, enable the Directors to state with confidence their conviction that the system now adopted by them for assuring Invalid Lives is as safe and beneficial as that upon which the scale for Healthy Lives is constructed.

Every description of Assurance may be effected with this Society,

BONUSES.

The two first Divisions averaged 22l. per Cent. on the Premiums paid.
The Third, 28l. per Cent. The Fourth Bonus, declared January, 1847, averaged rather more than 36l. per Cent.; and, from the large amount of Profit reserved for future appropriation, and other causes, the Bonuses hereafter are expected to EXCEED that Amount.

SOLICITORS' and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 57, Chancery-lane, London.

This Society presents the following Advantages to the Assured:—

First.—The security of a large subscribed Capital.
Second.—Exemption of the Assured from all Liability.
Third.—Tables of Premiums calculated on the true law of mortality, expressly for this Office, and affording particular advantages to young lives.

Fourth.—Participating and Non-participating Scales of Premiums: In the former the Assured are entitled to EIGHTY PER CENT. or FOUR-FIFTHS of the profits divided amongst them periodically, either by way of addition to the sum assured, or in diminution of Premium, at the option of the Assured.

Fifth.—No deduction is made from the four-fifths of the profits belonging to the Assured for interest on Capital, or Guarantee Fund.

Sixth.—No Policy disputed, except in case of fraud.

Seventh.—This Society gives a much larger share of profits to the
Life Offices.

Eighth.—Parties wishing to assure their lives without participating in the profits can do so on a lower scale of Premiums than that of a large proportion of other Offices.

Assurances may be effected through any respectable Solicitor, or by writing to the Secretary, from whom Prospectuses and all other requi-

Our attention has been called, by a Correspondent, to a case in the 3rd volume of Jones & Latouche, 556, Walmsley v. Walmsley), of which the marginal note is as follows:—"A surviving partner, who had the possession of the partnership books, wilfully and fraudulently refused to produce them, for the purpose of having the partnership accounts taken, under a decree of the Court of Chancery, for that purpose. The Master, in the absence of other evidence, charged a sum of 10% per annum on the capital stock, as the net gains made by the partners during the partnership, and debited the surviving partner with a moiety thereof. Held, that he was justified in doing so, and the Court decreed accordingly." This decision may appear, at first sight, a little arbitrary, but, we apprehend, that it is strictly consistent both with principle and authority. It must be observed, that the Master reported that the defendant (who was resident in England) declined to produce before him the books, which contained the account of the partnership transactions and dealings, though he gave him every opportunity of coming in and producing said books, and required him to produce them, and repeatedly, with the consent of the plaintiff, referred the proceedings in the cause, in order to induce the defendant to bring in and lodge said books in his office, in order to enable him to take said accounts; and he found, that defendant had wilfully and fraudulently withheld said books, although it was admitted, for the Master, that the defendant had the possession of the books, and could produce same, and although he was advised by his solicitor, acting for him in this matter, to produce same."

Of course, the report not being excepted to, the facts appearing upon it must be taken to be true; and, assuming them to be true, a grosser case of attempt to deprive a plaintiff of the means of knowing how his account is to be taken can scarcely be conceived.

Partners are, in a sense, trustees for each other; everything one partner knows relating to the joint business, and which may be for the benefit of that business, he is, clearly, bound to communicate. Every shilling of profit that he makes with the partnership funds he clearly holds as trustee for the firm. He is, therefore, with reference to his liability to account, on the footing of a trustee. If he could deal with the partnership funds, possess himself, exclusively, of the means of knowing what profits had resulted from such dealing, and then, by happening to be in a position practically to refuse the production of such means of knowledge, could insist, that, unless his opponent could produce evidence of the profits, he was merely to be charged with common interest, the jurisdiction of equity would, indeed, become a mere mockery, and, instead of checking, would open the door, to its very utmost width, to fraud.

There is, also, authority in support of the decision in Walmsley v. Walmsley, though none was cited in that case. In Walker v. Woodward, (1 Russ. 107), a much weaker case against the party charged, it appeared, by the answer, that the defendant Woodward had carried on business with the intestate's effects, and had made considerable profits; but he said he could not set forth the particular profits arising out of such use of the intestate's estate, as he had not kept any books, and had blended the transaction with his other concerns. The Court, on this, charged him with 5% per cent., with annual rests, and interest on those rests—in effect, therefore, with compound interest. Here there was, at the most, implied fraud; and the defendant clearly had not, on the facts stated, the means of saying what his profits had been. But the principle was taken to be clear, that, not shewing what profits he had made, he must pay something more than bare interest. It may be said, that, in Walmsley v. Walmsley, there was no admission and no evidence of any profits. But there was evidence that the defendant had the books, and knew exactly whether there had been any and what profits; and it would be idle to suppose, that, if there had been no profits, he would have withheld the books. It was to be presumed, therefore, against him, that there had been profits; and, that fact being presumed, the case is within Walker v. Woodward. The principle of Walmsley v. Walmsley seems, however, to go somewhat further, and to be of the same kind as that which was applied in Lord Chedworth v. Edwards, (8 Ves. 46), viz. that, if a person, holding a fiduciary character, will not inform the Court what is his own and what the cestui que trust's, the Court will assume the utmost that can be assumed in favour of the cestui que trust, without being very nice whether, in doing so, it is not treating, as belonging to the cestui que trust, that which may turn out to be the trustee's; and it is obvious, that, unless it did so, it would be powerless to repress fraud. In the case referred to, of Lord Chedworth v. Edwards, the defendant, the steward of the plaintiff, had received the plaintiff's rents for a long time, paying him from time to time certain sums, and mixing the remainder with his own and investing the whole in stock. Though it was clear that part of the stock belonged to the defendant, yet Lord Eldon restrained the defendant from transferring any part of it until he informed the Court what part was the plaintiff's. "The case," said his Lordship, "though new, stands upon a principle that will support it: only till he informs me what is his master's." A like principle was acted upon in White v. Lady Lincoln (8 Ves. 363). In that case, a confidential agent, who had neglected to keep such accounts of his dealings as would enable his employer to ascertain the true state of the account between them, so that there was no evidence which way the balance lay, was not allowed to charge for business done as a solicitor: in other words, because he, whose business it was to inform the Court, could not do so, and that, by his own neglect of duty, he was, in effect, fined to the extent of claims on the face of them, and, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, justly due.

The result of all these cases is, we apprehend, clearly to establish, that the Court exercises a jurisdiction to compel an accounting party indirectly to account, by assuming the account against him (if he will not inform the Court) to the utmost extent of the possible rights of the party entitled to the account; and will not permit a party, who knows or ought to know what he has done with the property of another, to go free on paying mere interest on the balances that have been in his hands.

The Right Hon. Sir Thomas Wilde, Knt., Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, has appointed the following gentlemen to be Perpetual Commissioners for taking the Acknowledgments of Deeds to be executed by Married Women:—Henry Whitmarsh, of Rye, Sussex, in and for the county of Sussex; John Clarke Chaplin, of Birmingham, in and for the county of Warwick, also in and for the counties of Stafford and Worcester; Thomas Coombe the younger, of Dorchester, in the county of Dorset, in and for the county of Dorset.

ON THE WRIT OF MANDAMUS.

Where the applicant appears to have a clear legal right to demand performance of the act required, and no valid excuse presents itself for refusing, the Court will frequently grant a rule absolute for a mandamus in the first instance: thus, if the application be to swear, or to admit to an office. (Res v. The Archdeacon of Lichfield and Coventry, 5 Nev. & M. 42; Ex parte Penruddock, 1 Harr. & W. 347; Reg. v. The Churchwardens of Manchester, 7 Dowl. P. C. 707). If it were to restore one who had been removed, they, perhaps, would grant a rule to shew cause only in the first instance, because there might be a good cause of removal. (Bull. N. P. 199). Upon a motion for a mandamus to the warden of the Vintners' Company to swear in J. J., one of the court of assistants, the affidavit stated that the deponent was informed by some of the court of assistants that he was elected, but as there was no positive affidavit of an election, the Court granted a rule to shew cause only; but said, if there had been a positive affidavit of election, they would have granted the writ in the first instance. (Case of the Vintners' Company, Bull. N. P. 200). If the application be to inspect the court rolls of a manor, the rule will be absolute in the first instance upon an affidavit of demand and refusal by the lord or steward of the manor. (Reg. Gen., H. T., 2 Will. 4, 1 Dowl. P. C. 197). It appears to have been the practice of the Court to grant such rules in some cases, even before the recent regulation. (Res v. Shelly, 3 T. R. 141; see Hodson v. Parker, E., 27 Geo. 2, C. B.; Talbot v. Villahai, M., 23 Geo. 3, B. R.). So, the rule will be absolute in the first instance to inspect corporation books, where a quo warranto is depending; (Res v. Trevanion, 2 Clinty, 366); also to justices to allow a poor-rate; (Reg. v. Lord Godolphin, 13 Law Journ., M. C., 57); to the overseers to pay a sum of money to the order of the guardians of an union for the quota of their parish to the maintenance of the poor. (Res v. St. Andrew's, Holborn, Adol. & Ell. 281). So, where a gaoler refused to deliver up to the executors, upon request, the body of a debtor in execution who had died in prison, until the amount of certain detainers were paid, the Court directed a mandamus to issue peremptory in the first instance, saying, "We cannot think that the gaoler has any lien whatever upon the dead body, or any ground of right to detain it. If any real or proper ground for the detention can be shewn, the party may retain it, and he will not be considered in contempt." (Ex parte The Lord of the Manor of Wakefield, 11 Law Journ., Q. B., 41; S. C., 1 G. & D. 566). So, where an infant was deserted at the door of the Foundling Hospital, the Court granted a mandamus in the first instance to the overseers of the poor of the parish, constituted by a local act, commanding them to receive the child. (Ex parte The Foundling Hospital, 5 Dow. 722).

By the act to amend the Act for the Regulation of Municipal Corporations in England and Wales, (6 & 7 Vict. c. 89, s. 5), it is enacted, that, from and after the passing of that act, in all cases of intended application to the Court of Queen's Bench, either for a mandamus to proceed to an election of any corporate officer or officers in any of the boroughs named in Schedule A.

and B. of the Municipal Corporation Act, (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76), or for any information in the nature of a quo warranto against any person claiming to be a corporate officer of and in any of the said boroughs, it shall be lawful for the party intending to make such application to give notice in writing thereof to the party to be affected thereby, at any time not less than ten days before the day in the said notice specified for making such application; in which notice shall be set forth the name and description of the party by whom such application will be made, together with a statement of the grounds thereof, and at the same time to deliver with such notice a copy of the affidavits whereby the application will be supported; and thereupon it shall be lawful for the said last-mentioned party to shew cause in the first instance against such application, and, if no sufficient cause be shewn, it shall be lawful for the said Court of Queen's Bench, on proof of the due service of such notice and statement, and of the delivery of a copy of such affidavits as may be used, for the purpose of supporting such application, to make the rule for such mandamus or information absolute, if the said Court shall so think fit, in the first instance; and also, if they shall so think fit, to direct that any writ of mandamus thereby ordered to be issued shall be peremptory in the first instance.

It is often of importance to parties, where the writ is granted by the Court in the first instance, that no delay should take place; under such circumstances, therefore, it would be desirable to have the writ of mandamus previously drawn, ingrossed, and inrolled ready for delivery by the clerk in court. (Gude's Crown Office Practice, 182). It may be as well here to mention that the Court will not grant one rule for two or more writs of mandamus. (Reg. v. The Mayor of Bridgnorth, 10 Adol. & Ell. 66). Nor will they grant one mandamus to restore several persons to office. (Anon., 2 Salk. 436). Or to admit all persons having a right to their freedom who should appear to demand it. (Reg. v. The Mayor of Kingston-upon-Hull, 1 Stra. 578). There must be a separate mandamus for each individual; but if the effect of a mandamus to do a certain act is to perfect the right of several persons, this is no objection. (Reg. v. Lord Mordacade, 1 W. Bl. 60). Nor is it any objection that one mandamus issues to compel the grant of two warrants of distress for two rates against the same individual. (Reg. v. Ellis and Another, 12 Law Journ., N. S., Q. B., M. C., 96).

Whenever it appears doubtful whether the party applying has a clear right to be admitted or sworn to the office which he seeks to compel, or that any question as to the validity of the election is likely to arise, or that the party against whom the Court is called upon to exercise its summary jurisdiction may, by possibility, have good cause to shew for his refusal to perform the act complained of, the Court will grant a rule to shew cause only in the first instance, in order to give the opposite party an opportunity of returning to the Court his reasons for refusing. Therefore, in an application to insert the name of a burgess on the burgess-roll of a borough, the Court will not grant a rule in the first instance for a peremptory mandamus, the stat. 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 78, s. 24, enabling the Court to inquire into the applicant's title "previous to ordering the name to be inserted," it would seem renders it imperative on the Court to do so before granting the writ. (Reg. v. Eye, 9 Adol. & Ell. 670; Reg. v. Harwich, 8 Adol. & Ell. 919). Otherwise, if a peremptory mandamus were awarded in the first instance, it might be to insert the name of a person who had not a vestige of claim to be placed on the burgess-roll, the consequence of which would be, to cause an endless source of litigation. So, if the application be to compel the trustees of a turnpike-road to pay damages awarded against them, the rule will be to shew cause only in the first instance. (Reg. v. Dunsbury, 4 Jur. 28). So, to examine witnesses in India. (13 Geo. 3, c. 68, s. 45; 1 Will. 4, c. 22, s. 1). The rule for a mandamus is nisi in the first instance. (Doe d. Greaves v. Pattison, 3 Dow, 35). Where the Court grants a rule to shew cause, though, upon shewing cause, it appear doubtful whether the party have a right or not, yet the Court will issue a mandamus in order that the right may be tried upon the return. (Reg. v. Bland, Bull. N. P. 200). But the Court will not grant a mandamus to a person to exercise a jurisdiction when it is doubtful whether he has power to exercise it or not. (Bull. N. P. 200). And where the party applying seeks to be restored to an office or place of profit from which he has been removed, it may be laid down as a general rule, that the Court almost invariably grants a rule to shew cause in the first instance, because a power of a motion may be vested in the removing party, or the applicant may have committed some act which renders it requisite, in which case it is but just that the parties should have an opportunity of justifying their conduct in the first instance. (Bull. N. P. 199).

A SUMMARY OF THE LAW OF MODERN PLEADING, incident to the Rules of Hilary Term, 1834; with such of the Decisions on Practice, Evidence, and Costs, as are closely connected with that subject. Also, copious Analysis of the Cases and Pleadings. By ROBERTS PHILIP TYRWHITT, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"The reports of the 'Common-law Commissioners' suggested extensive changes in the practice on this important subject, (Pleading), which changes, whether improvements or not, were sanctioned by Parliament, and embodied by all the common-law courts in general rules, dated Hilary Term, 1834. It was then sought to adapt old principles to modern exigencies, and to link the present with the past by regulating the transition—with what success the work before us attempts to develop. It embodies in its text the pith of the decisions on 'Modern Pleading,' as incident to the above 'rules,' and condenses in the notes other valuable matter at present spread over lengthy 'reports.' The latter feature is adapted to render the volume more extensively useful in courts of nisi Prius, particularly on the circuits, and in the library of country practitioners. Nor is it rigorously limited to its chief object; but includes the course of decisions on the replication de injuria in its extended application, as well as on the modern acts respecting land, tithes, mines, commons, ways, and easements, together with so much of the law of amendment, evidence, and costs as elucidates the new rules of pleading. On the whole, this work appears to have been prepared with much care and industry, and will be found to afford in small comparative compass a useful adjunct to the works of Stephen and Chitty."—Times, Oct. 29th, 1846.

Every question is treated of with clearness and accuracy, and the law as it exists is explained and demonstrated by recent decisions in the Courts of Law. CLERICAL, MEDICAL, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.—INVALID LIVES.

In addition to the ordinary Assurance of Healthy Lives, this Society, early in the year 1834, originated the plan of granting Policies on the Lives of Persons more or less debilitated from the standard of health. Having issued one-fourth of the whole number of Policies on Lives of that description, the Board have recently caused a careful investigation into this branch of the business to be made. The result of this investigation has proved highly satisfactory as to the past, and encouraging for the future. The data, derived from long experience in this class of cases, and exclusively available by this Society, enable the Directors to state with confidence their conviction that the system now adopted by them for assuring Invalid Lives is as safe and beneficial as that upon which the scale for Healthy Lives is constructed.

SEVERAL of the questions raised by the writ of error in William Smith O'Brien's case involve an inquiry into the effect of laws, which, after having existed in one kingdom, have been subsequently extended to another. This fact gives an additional importance, as well as intricacy, to the case. The common law of England and of Ireland, the operation of Poynings' laws, and the application of English statutes to Ireland before and since the Union, have been discussed in the arguments on this writ of error.

It is well known, that, in the reign of Henry VII, the then existing jurisprudence of England is supposed to have been extended to Ireland by Poynings' laws, (so called from Sir Edward Poynings, who, at that period, was Lord Deputy of Ireland); that, from that time until the Union, the Irish were bound by English statutes only, if expressly included in them; and that, since the Union, Ireland is bound by the laws of the Imperial Parliament, unless it be expressly excluded.

The first objection, raised by the writ of error, relates to the caption of the indictment; and it is contended, that the jurisdiction of the three judges, who presided under the special commission, is not shewn. The form of the caption is, that "at a special commission of oyer and terminer and general gaol delivery, holden in the county of Tipperary, at Clonmel, before the Right Honourable Chief Justice Blackburne, the Right Honourable Chief Justice Doherty, and the Right Honourable Mr. Justice Moore, justices and commissioners of our lady the Queen, nominated and appointed to inquire, to hear and determine, all manners of treasons," &c.; and "that those justices, with others, were nominated and appointed in that behalf, by virtue of a commission under letters patent," &c. It is said, that, under this recital, the three justices were not entitled to preside without the other justices referred to; and the following authorities are adduced in support of this position:—2 Hale, 25, 166; 2 Hawk. 61, 499; Bac. Abr. "Indictment," "Authority," P.; Com. Dig. "Justice of the Peace;" R. v. Cellars, (1 Sid. 367); The Earl of Leicester v. Hill, (Plowd. 370); Reg. v. Dowell, (9 C. & P. 780). On the other hand, it is said that the caption is according to all approved precedents; and that, if it had stopped at the word "treasons," it would have been sufficient. (2 Hawk. 349, "Indictment," s. 125; King v. Royce, 4 Burr. 2085).

The second objection is to the sixth count of the indictment, which charges the prisoner with having levied war against [the Queen, "within this realm." It is contended, that the offence is founded on the statute 25 Edw. 3, which did not apply originally to Ireland. (1 Hale P. C. 155; 35 Hen. 8, c. 2); that Poynings' Act, being an act of the Irish Parliament, could not extend an English statute to Ireland, but that, if it could have such effect, it must be regarded as a new Irish statute, making the offence treason, if committed within the realm of Ireland, and then it should be charged as an offence committed in Ireland, or an offence committed in England, but not as an offence committed in "this realm," which means the United Kingdom, there being no statute applicable to such a case.

To this it is answered, that the offence is treason at common law, (3 Inst. 9; 1 Hale P. C. 76), and that the common law of England is the common law of Ireland; but that the indictment is equally good if regarded according to the statute of Edward 3, which, it is said, only declared what was treason at common law.

The next objection is, that the prisoner was entitled to a copy of the indictment and a list of witnesses, to be delivered at the same time, and ten days before the trial, according to the English law. The grounds on which this argument rests are, that the offence is within stat. 57 Geo. 3, c. 6; that that statute, entitling all persons accused of treason (with a few exceptions) to those benefits, extended originally to Ireland; but, if not, its unrepealed portions have been so extended by the very terms of 11 Vict. c. 12, s. 2.

This objection is raised by a plea in suspension of the trial, to which a demurrer was allowed. To this objection it seems to be urged, that the stat. 57 Geo. 3, and the 36 Geo. 3, c. 7, (perpetuated by it), created new treasons, and apply to those only, and not to the treasons under 25 Edw. 3, within which this case comes; and, at all events, that these statutes of Geo. 3 do not extend to Ireland, either by their original force or by the stat. 11 Vict. c. 12. It is also said, that the plea in suspension is bad, applying only to one count, and yet pleaded to the whole indictment; that, if confined to that count, the Attorney-General might have entered a nolle prosequi to such count; that it sets up mere matter of practice, which should not be pleaded, and shews a reason for postponing the trial only of a part of the indictment.

Other grounds of error are, that the prisoner was allowed only twenty, instead of thirty-five, peremptory challenges; and that the sentence is erroneous, as there is no proper "allocutus" before judgment, the prisoner having been asked "whether he had anything to say wherefore the said justices and commissioners, on the premises aforesaid, ought not to proceed to judgment," instead of having been asked, "if he had anything to say against judgment and execution?" On this last point the following authorities are cited for the prisoner:—R. v. Geary, (1 Show. 131; 3 Salk. 358; 3 Burn's Just. 395; Com. Dig. "Indictment;" and 1 Chit. Crim. Law, p. 700). In answer, it is said, that a similar question was put to John Frost, and not objected to; and Sir John Perrot's case, and other cases in the State Trials, are referred to.

We have thus offered an analysis of the chief grounds of error, and the arguments advanced in support of them; and we shall, probably, return to the subject after the Court shall have given judgment in the case.

An objection, as to the validity of the proceedings, previously to shewing cause against a rule for a mandamus, must, in general, be made before the merits have been discussed, or the Court will not entertain it. Thus, where, on shewing cause against a rule for a mandamus, an objection was taken as to the sufficiency of the demand and refusal to perform the act required, the Court, after the merits had been discussed, refused to allow it, saying, that it was a point that should have been raised in the first instance. (Reg. v. The Eastern Counties Railway Company, 10 Adol. & Ell. 531. See also Reg. v. Parrott, M. T., 1839, (not reported), on a quo warranto the same regulation was determined upon by the judges of the Queen's Bench).

Care must be taken that no other parties are called upon by the rule than such as are directly interested in the subject-matter, or such as those who are liable to perform the act, the omission of which is complained of; otherwise the applicant will render himself liable to the costs of the parties so wrongfully brought before the Court. (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 21, s. 3). Thus, if some of the magistrates, attending at special sessions, take no part in a decision of the sessions, they ought not to be brought before the Court on a rule for a mandamus in respect of that decision. (Reg. v. The Justices of Wilts, 8 Dowl. 717). Where a rule, upon the churchwardens and overseers to shew cause why a mandamus should not issue, was directed to them and the twenty principal inhabitants of the parish, it was holden bad; but the Court, on motion, gave leave to amend it. (Reg. v. Churchwardens of Clerkenwell, 8 Geo. 1, Bull. N. P. 300). And, on a rule for a mandamus to elect a mayor, a substituting mayor de facto must always be a party to the rule. (Reg. v. Bankes, 3 Burr. 1452; S. C., 1 Bl. Rep. 455). The rule must merely require the party to do the act required, without specifying the mode in which he should comply. Thus, if it were for a corporation to pay a sum of money, it must not specify the fund out of which the payment is to be made; (Reg. v. Ledger and Others, 1 Q. B. Rep. 616); or in the case of an election of a mayor, the day on which the election is to take place, unless it were specifically enacted by the act of Parliament. (Reg. v. Mayor of Bridgewater, 2 Chit. Rep. 256). No unnecessary delay must take place in making the application, otherwise the Court will not entertain the application. (Reg. v. The Justices of Cambridge, 1 D. & Ry. 325; Reg. v. Cockermouth Inland Commissioners, 1 B. & Adol. 378; Reg. v. The Stainforth and Headly Canal Company, 1 M. & S. 32; Reg. v. The Leeds and Liverpool Canal Company, 11 Adol. & Ell. 516; Reg. v. The Justices of the West Riding of Yorkshire, 2 Adol. & Ell., N. S., 505, 506, n.)

It may be as well here to observe, that an important alteration has been made during the last session of Parliament with respect to justices of the peace, where it is sought to compel them to do any act which, by law, they are bound, by substituting a motion to the Court of Queen's Bench, in lieu of an application for a mandamus, thereby preventing considerable delay and expense. By the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 44, s. 5, it is enacted, "That, in all cases where a justice or justices of the peace shall refuse to do any act relating to the duties of his or their office as such justice or justices, it shall be lawful for the party requiring such act to be done to apply to her Majesty's Court of Queen's Bench, upon an affidavit of the facts, for a rule, calling upon such justice or justices, and also the party to be affected by such act, to shew cause why such act should not be done; and if, after due service of such notice, good cause shall not be shewn against it, the said Court may make the same absolute, with or without, or upon payment of, costs, as to them shall seem meet; and the said justice or justices, upon being served with such rule absolute, shall obey the same, and shall do the act required; and no action or proceeding whatsoever shall be commenced or prosecuted against such justice or justices for having obeyed such rule, and done such act so thereby required as aforesaid."

The rule, when granted, must be drawn up by the clerk of the rules in the Crown Office, and copies thereof made and served by the solicitor upon the parties mentioned in such rule (see form of rule, post); although it is not necessary either to serve the copies personally, or to shew the original rule at the time of service, it is better, in all cases, to serve the parties themselves, and produce the original rule, if there is no difficulty attending such service. An affidavit of the service must then be made, intitled, and sworn in the same way as pointed out (ante, p.). The Court must then be moved to make the rule absolute, when, if cause is shewn after argument, the rule will be either granted or refused, as they think fit. If made absolute, it is entered and drawn up by the clerk of the rules in the Crown Office.

The writ of mandamus, as already observed, (ante, Chap. I.), is a command issuing in the Queen's name from the Court of Queen's Bench, and directed to any person, corporation, or inferior court of judicature within the Queen's dominions, requiring them to do some particular thing, therein specified, which appertains to their office and duty.

The writ may be drawn either by counsel, clerk in court, or attorney. It is advisable, where the matter is special, that it be first settled by counsel or a pleader; when settled, let it be ingrossed on parchment, with an indorsement of the name and address of the prosecutor's attorney; get it signed and sealed, and entered with the clerk in court, who will enrol it. (Gude's Crown Office Pract. 183).

"Victoria, by the grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland Queen, Defender of the Faith: To A. B., of —, greeting. Whereas we have been given to understand, in our Court before us, at Westminster, that [here set out the subject-matter of complaint, according to the facts]. And whereas we have also been given to understand, in our Court before us, that application hath been made to you, A. B., to [according to the fact]; but that you, the said A. B., have neglected and refused to [set out the facts], to the great damage and prejudice of [prosecutor], as we have been informed from his complaint made to us in this respect: whereupon, he has humbly besought us that a fit and speedy remedy may be applied in this behalf; and we, being willing that due and speedy justice should be done in the premises as it is reasonable, do command you, the said A. B., firmly enjoining you, that, immediately after the receipt of this our writ, you do [set out the matter sought to be enforced], or that you shew cause to the contrary thereof, lest by your default the same complaint should be repeated to us; and how you shall have executed this our writ, make known to us, at Westminster, on — the — day of — next following; then returning to us this our said writ. Witness [Chief Justice], at Westminster, the — day of —, in the — year of our reign."

A peremptory mandamus is in the same form, except at the words "do peremptorily command you" are inserted instead of "do command you;" and the words, "or that you shew cause to the contrary thereof" in italics, are to be omitted.

The Court will not in general permit the joinder of several persons in an application for one or more writs of mandamus, but will leave the parties to apply for separate writs, (Reg. v. Chester, 5 Mod. 11); it is irregular to grant a single rule nisi for the issuing of several writs, (Reg. v. Bridgnorth, 10 Adol. & Ell. 70; see Anon., 2 Salk. 436; Reg. v. Medhurst, 1 Wils. 283; Reg. v. Christchurch, Bull. N. P. 200); therefore one writ of mandamus cannot issue at the instance of two persons, for the enforcement of separate claims, although they have been successors in office in the same office in respect of which the claim arises. (Ex parte Scott, 8 Dowl. 328). And in an application for a mandamus to admit or restore, where there are several parties, several writs of mandamus should be applied for, for the election of one is not the election of another, (Reg. v. Chester, 5 Mod. 11), and they may have been chosen at different times. (See 2 Salk. 433, 436). A mandamus must be directed to those who are to do the thing commanded, and care must be taken that it is so directed, for an omission in this respect will render it invalid. (Reg. v. The Mayor of Hereford, 2 Salk. 701; Reg. v. Rippon, Id. 433; S. C., 1 Ld. Raym. 563; Reg. v. Norwich, 2 Salk. 436; Com. Dig. "Mandamus," C. 1). This duty is cast upon the person who applies for the writ, who must, at his peril, direct it to the proper presiding officer; for the Court, when they grant the writ, will not specify the person to whom it is to be directed. (Reg. v. Wigan, 2 Burr. 782; see Reg. v. The Commissioners of London Court of Requests, 7 East, 295; Reg. v. Ward, 2 Stra. 893). Where a corporation is to elect, or do any other act, it may be directed to them by their corporate name. (Com. Dig. "Mandamus," C. 1; see Reg. v. Ledyard and Others, 1 Q. B. 616; and 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, Sch. A.). And if it be directed to those who ought to do the act, though they are only part of the corporation, it is sufficient. (Abingdon Case, Carth. 601; Reg. v. The Mayor of Leeds, 1 Stra. 640; Com. Dig. "Mandamus," C. 1; 1 Roll. 409; and see Reg. v. Abingdon, Ld. Raym. 560). If the writ be directed to the corporation, it has been held good; but if it be directed to those who, by the constitution of the corporation, ought to do the act, without doubt it is good—per Holt, C. J., in Reg. v. Abingdon. Since the Corporation Act, it seems that it should be directed in the style of the corporate body. (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, Sch. A.). If the writ be improperly directed, e.g. if the right of election be in the mayor and aldermen, and the mandamus is directed to the mayor, aldermen, and common council, the Court will grant a supersedeas, quia improvide emanavit. (Reg. v. Norwich, Stra. 55). And if it be directed to more than ought to be included in it, it seems it would be bad. (Reg. v. Smith, 2 M. & S. 598). So, if a writ be directed to A., which commands B. to restore, &c., it will be quashed. (Com. Dig. "Mandamus," C. 1). If a writ be directed to a corporation by a wrong name, they may return this special matter, and rely upon it; but if they answer the exigency of the writ, they admit themselves to be the corporation to whom the writ is directed, and cannot take advantage of the misnomer. (Reg. v. The Bailiffs of Norwich, Salk. 434, 436). Although the Court will not specify to whom the writ of mandamus is to be directed, nevertheless, where an application has been made to an officer in his corporate capacity to do an act which, by law, he is bound to do, and whose term of office ceases before the writ of mandamus is applied for, they will direct the writ to issue to the officer generally in his official capacity, as where on an application to insert the name of a Burgess on the Burgess-roll, in pursuance of the recent statute (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 78, s. 24), the application had been made to the mayor, and, before the expiration of the period in which the applicant could apply to the Court, the mayor died, and another had been elected in his stead, the Court directed the mandamus to the mayor generally; and, on an objection being taken that he was not the party to whom the application had been made, said, that there was always a mayor, and, therefore, the mandamus sought for was to be directed to him generally. (Reg. v. The Mayor of the Borough of Ege, 9 Adol. & Ell. 670—Per Denman, C. J.)

Von Savigny's Treatise on Possession; or, the Jus Possessionis of the Civil Law. Sixth Edition. Translated from the German, by Sir ERSKINE PERRY, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court at Bombay.

[London, S. Sweet, 1848.]

Sir Erskine Perry has here placed within reach of the English student Von Savigny's celebrated Treatise on Possession. The work needs no commendation of ours, even if we did not know enough, as practical English lawyers, to feel diffidence as to venturing any criticism whatever upon a purely technical book on a branch of a system of law of which we have no practical knowledge, although we have read some Roman law in our time, and even heard a course of lectures upon it by a lecturer of learning and ability. However, we may remind Sir Erskine Perry, who would appear to have overlooked the fact, when he (Dedication, iv) cites Dr. Arnold as "a high authority" on the subject of Roman law, that a knowledge of law cannot be acquired either by reading or hearing lectures. In fact, speaking from experience, we consider lectures as not only a very inefficient, but a very disagreeable mode of instruction, and only excusable in cases where the hearers are without either the means of obtaining books or of reading them. The case is very different with regard to the perusal of lectures of superior excellence, such as those of M. Guizot on History, and those of Mr. John Austin on the Province of Jurisprudence. Having heard all the latter and a few of the former, we are here able to speak, with some confidence, of the small advantage derived from the hearing compared with that derived from the reading.

There is one thing that a man may learn from this book of Von Savigny, if he learns nothing else: and that is, to be exceedingly diffident about the use of Roman law terms at all,—a thing which the smatterers in Roman law are much addicted to; and what modern (if we except, perhaps, Von Savigny himself) can be anything but a smatterer in a system of law which has been dead (at least in anything like its integrity) for so many centuries. Von Savigny shews, in the course of this work, that many learned men, who had devoted their lives to the study, did not know what possession meant in the Roman law. Probably the same might be said of the much-used term "jus in re," or "in rem."

Assuming that a knowledge of Roman law may be of some use to an English lawyer, we must be at the same time careful to remind the student, that that knowledge must be at least moderately accurate, and to caution him against being misled by the profuse, yet very superficial, display of it made by such writers as Mr. Justice Story. We have had occasion to examine minutely one or two of Mr. Justice Story's works, and we can most conscientiously declare, that we have never received from them the slightest assistance towards the solution of a difficult legal problem. When Mr. Justice Story meets with any knotty point, he does not untie,—he does not even cut,—the knot; but, skimming over it, in his hop, skip, and jump manner, alights upon some philosopher Square maxim of his small philosophy; and immediately adding, "and with this agrees the Roman law," favours his readers with a page or two from The Digest, which, however sound in reason and pure in Latinity, probably has little or nothing to do with the question discussed. On the subject of these American writers on law, we quote the following observations from Mr. William David Evans's pamphlet on the "Progress of Legal Education:"—

"Of all the evils which have resulted from what a critic calls 'the poverty and narrowness of the English law books,' one of the greatest appears to us to be the currency which it has lately allowed certain American writers to obtain in this country. Commercial intelligence, no doubt, passes from Europe into the United States with wonderful rapidity and precision; but sound judgment of the value of law authorities seems a thing of much slower diffusion. Messrs. Story and Kent (we forget the names of any other transatlantic authors who have been read in England) are certainly very smooth writers, and collect the matter of their treatises from a much wider and more enlarged range than the majority of English commentators and text writers; but their collected masses remind us of nothing in the world so much as that ill-assorted fabric of fine gold, vile brass, and base clay, the image of Nebuchadnezzar's dream,—ignorant, it would seem, that a large portion of legal publications are but the mere contract work of hired labourers for the booksellers, or else, determined upon a complete system of equality and fraternity, they constantly surprise us by an argument, in which, perhaps, the first authority is a high judicial decision; the second, the conclusion of a Fearne or a Mitford; the third and fourth, the dicta of two gentlemen compilers; the fifth, a misapplied text of Roman law; the sixth, a misunderstood extract from some erroneous and exploded commentator upon it. Desirable as it may be to enlarge the narrowness of our English treatises, we still venture to think, that the first requisite in working out a legal discussion to any sound conclusion, must always be a just discrimination of the value of the authorities made use of; and that a co-caversion of unweighed and unsifted citations is the last and worst instrument. We confess, that on these and similar grounds, these modern importations have always appeared to us so very objectionable, that it was not without some satisfaction that we were some time ago informed, by a learned friend who had happened to be present on the occasion, that an attempt being made, in the court of a very experienced Chancery judge, to cite Mr. Story's work on equity jurisprudence, the learned Vice-Chancellor promptly interposed by observing, that the work might be a very pleasing one for private perusal, but he must beg that it should not be made part of a forensic argument. But the point of all others on which an experienced reader ought to be most carefully cautioned respecting these works is, their use of the civil law,—a feature which, in the almost total neglect of that learning by English writers, has, perhaps, contributed as much as anything to the partial reception of this new crop of legal literature. To any one in any degree acquainted with the Roman law and its commentators, the American use of it must, we think, appear little less than marvellous. The commentators most frequently quoted by Messrs. Kent and Story, are those who have long been quite superseded; and it may safely be asserted, that the principal result of the civil-law citations, with which it has pleased them to ornament their pages, has been to embalm a congeries of exploded errors in a tissue of original misconceptions."

Having mentioned one passage of Mr. Evans's pamphlet, with which we agree, we feel bound to add our protest against his more than flippancy, his indecent, st-

* Some confusion has arisen in respect to the terms "jus in re" and "jus in rem" in this way. By the classical jurists the term "jura in re" is opposed to "dominium," and is merely an abridged expression for "jura in re aliena." But by the successors of the Roman lawyers the meaning of "jus in re" has been extended; as they employ it, "jus in re" being synonymous with "jus in rem," and equivalent to the "dominium" sensu latiore of the classical jurists.

tack (pp. 27, 28) upon Mr. John Austin's "Province of Jurisprudence Determined." Mr. Evans will fully understand the extent to which we differ from him on this subject, when we say, that we should find it difficult to name any one book from which we learnt so much, as from that; together with the Tables of Roman Law, which Mr. Austin printed for the use of those who attended his lectures. Those tables were accompanied with notes of considerable length. We have read a good deal of law since we first read those notes. But, having occasion to refer to them the other day, we found that we were fully more impressed than on the first perusal with the extraordinary acuteness and logical power displayed in them; so much so, indeed, that we should say of them, what Mr. Austin has said of this work of Von Savigny, merely substituting "notes" for "books," that they are, "of all notes upon law, the most consummate and masterly" with which we are acquainted. We admit that the style, (of the lectures, not of those notes), in order to attain precision, may often appear to be deficient in conciseness. We admit, also, that there is somewhat too much of that pedant sneer, which seems to beset most easily that section of the pedant tribe, which fancies it can see neither sense nor philosophy save in a dead or a foreign tongue. But, with all this, we pray Mr. Evans to treat, at least with more show of courtesy, a man, who, we venture to assure him, is a giant, compared to those pigmy pedants, who fancy themselves great men, because they are over old Roman lawyers and their modern German commentators.

The following general description of the right of possession, by Mr. John Austin, may be appropriately quoted here, both as giving, in a condensed form, the substance of Von Savigny's views on that subject, and as ending with a brief but significant criticism of Von Savigny's treatise. The reader may then be able to judge for himself, whether Mr. Austin is so absolutely unintelligible as Mr. Evans represents him as being:—

"If one person exercise a right, residing in another person, but without authority from the latter, and without authority from those through whom the latter is entitled, the former acquires, by his unauthorised or adverse exercise, the anomalous right which is called the right of possession.

"This general description of the right of possession, must, however, be taken with the following limitation:—The person who possesses adversely, or who exercises the right of another, without the requisite authority, does not acquire thereby the right of possession, in case the adverse possession began vi, or arose through any of the means which fall within the name of violence.

"The right of possession must be distinguished from the right of possessing, or (changing the phrase) from the right to possess; for the right of possessing, or the right to possess, is a property or integral part of the right of possession itself, and also of numerous rights which widely differ from the latter. In other words, the right of possessing, considered generally, may arise from any of various titles or causes; but the peculiar right of possessing, which is styled the right of possession, is a right of possessing that arises exclusively from the fact of an adverse possession.

"Although it arises from actual possession, the right rem, which is styled the right of possession, must be distinguished from the rights in rem which arise from occupation or occupancy; for the fact of possessing, which is styled occupation or occupancy, consists in the possession of a something that is res nullius. It, the fact of possessing which gives the right of possession, consists in the adverse exercise, by the person who acquires the right, of a right residing in another.

"Consequently, the following description of the right of possession, has all the exactness which accords with extreme brevity. It is that right to possess, (or to use or exercise a right), which springs from the fact of an adverse possession not beginning through violence.

"As against all, but the person whose right is exercised adversely, the person who acquires the right of possession is clothed with the very right which he affects to exercise. And, as against the person whose right is exercised adversely, he may acquire the very right which he affects to exercise through the title, or mode of acquisition, styled prescription. Or (adopting a current, but inadequate phrase) the right of possession ripens, by prescription, into the right of dominion or property.

"Note.—The right of possession, strictly and properly so called, or the right of possession considered as a substantive right, is a right that arises exclusively from the fact of an adverse possession. But the term right of possession, is not unfrequently employed with an extremely large signification. Taking the term, with this very extensive meaning, the right of possession arises from an actual possession, whether the actual possession be adverse or not. For example: it is said, that the dominus in actual possession has a right of possession, which arises from that actual possession and which is completely independent of his right of dominion. But (as I shall shew in my lectures) the right of possession, considered as a substantive right, is a right that arises exclusively from the fact of an adverse possession; the so-called right of possession, which arises from an actual possession, not adverse, being a property of another right, or being an integral part of another right. For example: it is absurd to ascribe to the dominus in possession a right of possession, independent of his right of dominion; for, if the dominus actually possesses, it is as dominus that he actually possesses. As I shall shew, in my lectures, the term, right of possession, acquired the large signification to which I have adverted above, in consequence of an extension of such possessory remedies, as, in their origin, were appropriate to parties invested with the right of possession, strictly and properly so called. These possessory remedies, though originally appropriate to such parties, were afterwards extended to any possessors who had been wrongfully disturbed in their actual possessions. In the Roman law, for example, a certain interdict (closely analogous to an action of ejectment) was originally appropriate to parties invested with the right of possession, strictly and properly so called. But it was extended to the dominus who had been wrongfully evicted from his actual possession. For, by resorting to an interdict, grounded on his actual possession instead of resorting to an action grounded on his right of dominion, he avoided the inconvenient necessity of proving his right of dominion, and had merely to demonstrate his actual possession at the time of the wrongful eviction; just as a party, who is seised or entitled in fee, recovers through an action of ejectment, from an ejector without title, by merely proving his actual possession at the time of the wrongful ejectment. And since the dominus recovered by the interdict, on merely proving his actual possession, he recovered, in a certain sense, through his right of possession merely. But yet it were absurd to affirm that he had any right of possessing, independently of his right of dominion; or to liken the right of possessing, which is parcel of the right of dominion, to the substantive right of possessing which arises, solely or exclusively, from the fact of an adverse possession. The above-mentioned extension of possessory remedies, has rendered the right of possession one of the darkest of the topics which the science of jurisprudence presents. But, there is not, intrinsically, any remarkable difficulty in the right of possession, which is strictly and properly so called; that is to say, which arises, solely or exclusively, from the fact of an adverse possession, and which is the basis of acquisition by usucapion, and of other acquisition by prescription.

"I shall analyse the anomalous and perplexed right, which is styled the right of possession. Performing the analysis, I shall, happily, be able to borrow from a celebrated treatise, by Von Savigny, intitled, 'Das Recht des Besitzes,' or 'De Jure Possessionis,' of all books upon law, the most consummate and masterly; and of all books, which I pretend to know accurately, the least alloyed with error and imperfection."—Outline of a Course of Lectures on General Jurisprudence, or the Philosophy of Positive Law, pp. xxxv to xxxviii, [subjoined as an Appendix to "The Province of Jurisprudence Determined."] "

Much might be said on the subject of the name General Jurisprudence,—a term, which has always appeared to us open to some of the objections made by Bishop Berkeley to Locke's general idea of a triangle, which is "neither oblique, nor rectangle, equilateral, nor scalene, but all and none of these at once." But, at present, we can only add, that "A Course of Lectures on Roman Law," would have more accurately designated Mr. Austin's course, than the name cited above.

CLERICAL, MEDICAL, AND GENERAL LIFE AS-SURANCE SOCIETY.—INVALED LIVES.

In addition to the ordinary Assurance of Healthy Lives, this Society, early in the year 1824, originated the plan of granting Policies on the Lives of Persons more or less deviating from the standard of health.
 Having issued one-fourth of the whole number of Policies on Lives of that description, the Board have recently caused a careful investigation into this branch of the business to be made. The result of this investigation has proved highly satisfactory as to the past, and encouraging for the future. The data, derived from long experience in this class of cases, and exclusively available by this Society, enable the Directors to state with confidence their conviction that the system now adopted by them for assuring Invalid Lives is as safe and beneficial as that upon which the scale for Healthy Lives is constructed.

65	5 16 3	6 19 11	7 16 9

Every description of Assurance may be effected with this Society, and Policies are granted on the Lives of Persons in any Station, and of

REVENUE.

The two last Dividends averaged 22l. per Cent. on the Premiums paid.
 The Third, 26l. per Cent. The Fourth Bonus, declared January, 1847, averaged rather more than 36l. per Cent., and, from the large amount of Profit reserved for future appropriations, and other causes, the Bonuses hereafter are expected to EXCEED that Amount.

 of 122,000l. per annum.

Tables of Rates, and Forms of Proposal, can be obtained of

SOLICITORS' AND GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 17, Chancery-lane, London.

This Society presents the following Advantages to the Assured:—

- First.—The security of a large subscribed Capital.
- Second.—Exemption of the Assured from all liability.
- Third.—Tables of Premiums calculated on the true law of mortality, expressly for this Office, and affording particular advantages to young lives.
- Fourth.—Participating and Non-participating Scales of Premiums. In the former the Assured are entitled to EIGHTY PER CENT. or FOUR-FIFTHS of the profits divided amongst them periodically, either by way of addition to the sum assured, or in diminution of Premium, at the option of the Assured.
- Fifth.—No deduction is made from the four-fifths of the profits belonging to the Assured for interest on Capital, or Guarantee Fund.
- Sixth.—No Policy disputed, except in case of fraud.
- Seventh.—This Society gives a much larger share of profits to the Assured, and at a lower rate of Premium than the great majority of other Life Offices.
- Eighth.—Parties wishing to secure their lives without participating in the profits can do so on a lower scale of Premiums than that of a large proportion of other Offices.

Assurances may be effected through any respectable Solicitor, or by writing to the Secretary, from whom Prospectuses and all other requi-

CLERICAL, MEDICAL, AND GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.—INVALED LIVES.

In addition to the ordinary Assurance of Healthy Lives, this Society, early in the year 1824, originated the plan of granting Policies on the Lives of Persons more or less deviating from the standard of health. Having issued one-fourth of the whole number of Policies on Lives of that description, the Board have recently caused a careful investigation into this branch of the business to be made. The result of this investigation has proved highly satisfactory as to the past, and encouraging for the future. The data, derived from long experience in this class of cases, and exclusively available by this Society, enable the Directors to state with confidence their conviction that the system now adopted by them for assuring Invalid Lives is as safe and beneficial as that upon which the scale for Healthy Lives is constructed.

Every description of Assurance may be effected with this Society, and Policies are granted on the Lives of Persons in any Station, and of EVERY AGE.

BONUSES.

The two last Dividends averaged 22½ per Cent. on the Premiums paid. The Third, 26½ per Cent. The Fourth Bonus, declared January, 1847, averaged rather more than 36½ per Cent., and, from the large amount of Profit reserved for future appropriations, and other causes, the Bonuses hereafter are expected to EXCEED that Amount.

The Society's Income, which is steadily INCREASING, is now upwards of 122,000*l.* per annum.

SOLICITORS' AND GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, 11, Chancery-lane, London.

This Society presents the following Advantages to the Assured:—

First.—The security of a large subscribed Capital.

Second.—Exemption of the Assured from all liability.

Third.—Tables of Premiums calculated on the true law of mortality, expressly for this Office, and affording particular advantages to young lives.

Fourth.—Participating and Non-participating Scales of Premiums. In the former the Assured are entitled to EIGHTY PER CENT. OF FOUR-FIFTHS of the profits divided amongst them periodically, either by way of addition to the sum assured, or in diminution of Premium, at the option of the Assured.

Fifth.—No deduction is made from the four-fifths of the profits belonging to the Assured for interest on Capital, or Guarantee Fund.

Sixth.—No Policy disputed, except in case of fraud.

Seventh.—This Society gives a much larger share of profits to the Assured, and at a lower rate of Premium than the great majority of other Life Offices.

Eighth.—Persons wishing to secure their lives without participating in the profits can do so on a lower scale of Premiums than that of a large proportion of other Offices.

Assurances may be effected through any respectable Solicitor, or by writing to the Secretary, from whom Prospectuses and all other requisite Information may be obtained.

CHARLES JOHN GILL, Secretary.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"This volume is very comprehensive. Its peculiar feature is its List of the Attorneys in England and Wales, placed, as in the Law List, under the several towns in which they practise, and the names of their London agents. Much time has been given to its preparation this year, and, so far as we have been able to test it, it appears to be singularly complete. Other matters, usually found in Legal Diaries and Almanacs, are added, with some Original Papers on Legal Topics. Altogether, it is a work of great labour, very useful, and very cheap."—The Law Times, Nov. 18, 1848.

"To every branch of the Legal Profession this yearly periodical is of the utmost convenience and utility. It is a valuable compendium of information on many subjects of practical interest, and, as a work of reference, is admirably adapted to communicate knowledge and economise time. . . . No legal man's chambers are complete without it."—Liverpool Advertiser.

"It is one of the most useful and comprehensive Year Books published, and forms an invaluable acquisition to the chambers of the barrister, the offices of the attorney, and the counting-house of the merchant."—Chronicle.

THERE is an appointment falling to the share of the Bar on an average, we believe, about once in every six or seven years, very brilliant in point of emolument, and tolerably dazzling in point of temporary rank and importance, but, like all the apparent good things of this world, surrounded with many disadvantages.

This appointment, whenever made, almost always, we really might say we believe invariably, exposes its possessor to sarcasm and animadversion at the hands of the public. The appointment to which we allude is that of Advocate-General to the Government of India. In the course of less than twelve years there have been, we believe, three vacancies in this lucrative appointment; and, on the filling up of each vacancy, the public (whether speaking through disinterested organs or not, we will not venture to say) has rushed headlong on the unhappy recipient of the vacant appointment, stigmatising it in each case as an appointment of an unknown, and, therefore, as it is assumed, an unfit man, obtained through interest. Now, in all this, there is some truth as to facts; much ignorance as to the causes of those facts; and much error in the reasoning upon them. It is true that the appointment in question is generally given to men but little known out of the Profession, and only moderately known in it. It is true that what is commonly called interest has much to do, in general, with the appointment. But it does not follow, nor is it the fact, that the appointment has, generally, been given to unfit men, looking at fitness as relative—that is, with reference to the possibility of obtaining men of greater fitness. The truth seems to be this: the appointment of Advocate-General to the Government of India is one of great emolument; one with which a tolerably prudent man may live in India in a manner befitting his rank, and return, at the end of ten years or thereabouts, with a considerable fortune. But to do so, he must spend at least ten years in India. He must, of course, relinquish all idea of rising to the honours of his Profession in this country—honours which never fall to the lot of any but those who give the best of their lives to the service of the public in the Profession and in the Legislature, in England. He must expose his health and that of those dependent upon him (if there be any such) to the dangerous effects of an eastern climate, not always easy to be borne by those who inure themselves to it from youth, but doubly hazardous to those who, in middle age, attempt to brave it. All these drawbacks must be taken into the account before men at the Bar will accept an appointment which offers gold, but at the expense of honourable ambition; gold, but at the expense of health; gold, but at the expense of separation from all those ties which have become to most men, old enough to obtain the appointment, a part of themselves. It would flow, as a mere matter of reasoning, from this, the true view of the value of the appointment of Advocate-General, that men who have already achieved at the Bar a solid celebrity,—to whom, therefore, an honourable independence is almost secured, and by whom the prospect of the higher rewards of professional ambition may be legitimately entertained,—will not be prompt to take the boon even when proffered. And the fact is accordingly. It is generally understood, that, on each of the occasions when the appointment of Advocate-General has been vacant, it has been offered to men whose names were prominently before the public,—men who were, to use the professional phrase, in good business,—and has been declined by them. The fact was, indeed, publicly stated in the House of Commons on the occasion of the appointment of the late Advocate-General of India. It is, besides, well known, that any man at the Bar realising by his professional exertions an income of

The Government of India is, therefore, from the nature of things, and from the particular nature of our profession, absolutely and inevitably unable to obtain the services of men, of anything approaching that celebrity which depends on the possession of considerable business, and is thrown back upon that class of men, not an inconsiderable one, in which sound learning, and, possibly, great talents, may be found, but which is a class unknown to the general public. In that class are many men equally fit for such an appointment, though, it may be admitted, not so fit as the men who have already conquered reputation. Among those equally fit, it is perfectly natural, and it is perfectly inevitable, that he who has the best interest will receive the offer of the appointment. Those who, being equally fit, have not the offer, may repine, because they are not the parties selected, (though, we apprehend, as wisely as they would repine that another has a better private fortune than themselves); but what can it matter to the public, if as fit a man as the only accessible class of men furnishes is selected, whether he is selected because known to persons having influence with the Government of India, or for any other reason?

The fact is, in this as in a great many other cases, the public wants that which is unattainable. It imagines, because a foreign appointment offers a great deal of money, that none ought to hold it but men of eminence; forgetful, that, to men of eminence, there are things, which, combined with moderate gains, are more precious than infinitely larger emoluments separate from such things. It then forgets, that, being thrown back upon the large class of men of moderate standing and reputation, the Government of India has not the means of ascertaining which of such men are fit, except by the test of private report, which is, in fact, but another term for interest. If that interest is, on any particular occasion, found to thrust forward any man notably insufficient in point of standing or ability, then, indeed, the public may complain. But to complain, because a man appointed has not made public proof of that ability, of which if he had the public reputation he never would accept the appointment,—to complain, because he is simply unknown, when no other class but that of the unknown men is open to the blandishments of the great Indian appointment,—is sheer folly.

It will probably be concluded, that our remarks are partly caused by a most uncalled-for attack, lately made in a public print, on the member of our Profession recently selected for the office in question; and some may suppose, from the tone of our remarks, that we are, under cover of a general dissertation, defending a personal friend. The first part of the conclusion would be correct; the second, incorrect. We are, personally, wholly unacquainted with the present Advocate-General; and the intention of our remarks is to shew, first, that it is not to be inferred, that, in a profession such as ours, where eminence is of slow growth, every unknown man is an incompetent man: and, secondly, that, except by a combination of circumstances, so rare as to be scarcely possible, the Government of India can never hope to obtain the services of a man of established reputation; and that, therefore, whether they be good or whether they be bad, the public must be content to see unknown men appointed to the Government law offices of India.

ON THE WRIT OF MANDAMUS.

If the writ of mandamus be improperly directed, i.e. if the party to whom it is directed be not the person to whom the executing the matter sought to be enforced belonged, he should make an application to quash the writ, or return the matter. (Rees v. Ward, 2 Str. 897).

Secondly, the writ must be according to the rule, and follow it in express terms, otherwise it will be irregular; and the Court, on motion, will order it to be quashed. (Rees v. Wildman, 2 Str. 879; Rees v. The Mayor of Kingston, 1 Str. 578; Rees v. Water Eaton, 2 Smith, 54; Rees v. Tucker, 3 B. & C. 545; Rees v. The Churchwardens of Clerkenwell, Bull. N. P. 199). It must also contain convenient certainty in setting forth the duty to be performed; but it need not particularly set forth by what authority the duty exists, unless the duty arise from the custom of any particular place, or from the grant of a charter or franchise, when the custom or grant should be set out, and the party brought within it. (Rees v. The Coopers' Company of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, 7 T. R. 543; Rees v. The Churchwardens and Trustees of St. Pancras, 6 Adol. & Ell. 364).

Therefore, where a mandamus to the commissary of the Archbishop of York, to admit a deputy registrar, stated quod minus ritè recusavit to admit, it was holden sufficient, though it was objected it was the constant form to allege, that the party to whom the writ is directed was the person to whom it appertains to swear and admit; for if the defendant was not the person to whom the executing this writ belonged, he should have so returned it; but, instead of that, the return consisted merely of matter of excuse; besides, it was laid down that minus ritè be refused, which was an averment that, in justice, he ought to do it. (Rees v. Ward, 2 Str. 897; S. C., 7 East, 347, n.).

So, a mandamus to the Dean of Arches to grant probate to Lord Londonderry's executors, setting out, that the dean juxta juris exigentiam recusavit, was holden sufficient, though it was objected that it did not shew the dean's title to grant probate, not having set out that there were bona notabilia; for the Court will not presume an inferior jurisdiction; and it appeared that he had already done some acts of office as the Prærogative Judge, and he shall not be received now, to say it does not appear that he has any jurisdiction (Rees v. Bettisworth, 2 Str. 857).

So, a mandamus reciting, "whereas there is or ought to be one bailiff and twelve capital burgesses." (Rees v. Devizes, Mich., 7 Anne, Bull. N. P. 204; S. C., Ser. 36).

So, a mandamus reciting, that whereas there ought to be a common council, consisting of the mayor and twenty-four persons chosen by the mayor and burgesses, without stating whether by charter or prescription. Rez v. The Mayor of Nottingham, Say. 36; Bull. N. P. 34; Hil., 25 Geo. 2).

So, a mandamus reciting a custom that the eldest son of every freeman, being born within the port, hath a right in respect thereof, upon payment of a reasonable sum, to be admitted a freeman, and that a reasonable sum had been tendered, is sufficient; for, if the sum be not reasonable, it may be shewn on return. (Rez v. Hastings, Cas. temp. Hard. 362).

So, in a mandamus to a company to compel them to enrol indentures of apprenticeship, it is sufficient to state generally that those who have served a free burgess, &c., under indentures of apprenticeship, and whose indentures have been enrolled, are entitled to be admitted to their freedom: that A. B. had served &c.; that his indentures ought to have been enrolled on being tendered &c.; and that they were tendered for that purpose, but that the defendants had refused to enrol them, &c. (Rez v. Coopers' Company, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, T. R. 543). Distinct rights cannot be joined in one writ of mandamus. Therefore, where a mandamus was granted to the mayor to assemble and transact the business of the corporation, and, in drawing up the writ, they inserted a command to assemble and also to admit persons having a right to their freedom who should appear before them to demand it, the Court suspended the writ. (Rez v. The Mayor of Kingston, 1 Str. 578; Rez v. Wooley, 2 Str. 1259; see Rez v. Medhurst, 1 Hils. 283; Bull. N. P. 200).

If there be any other remedy than by writ of mandamus, but which, from some cause or other, cannot be enforced, and the only available means of enforcing the right is by mandamus, it should be shewn by the writ that recourse cannot be had to that remedy; for, as we have before seen, the ground of the application for a mandamus is, that there is no other remedy. Where, therefore, a mandamus, directed to a corporation, commanding them to pay a poor-rate, omitted to state that the defendants had no effects upon which a distress could be levied, it was holden bad. (Rez v. The Marine Pier Company, 3 B. & A. 220. Quære, whether such a case a mandamus will lie?)

Every circumstance that is requisite to shew that a party is entitled to be admitted, must be suggested in the writ. (Peat's case, 6 Mod. 310; per Holt, C. J.) Therefore, where, in a mandamus to the ordinary to enow a curate, it was stated that he had been "duly nominated and appointed by the inhabitants" of a parish to be curate of the Church of P., but neither a consent of the rector, or any endowment or custom of the inhabitants to make such nomination and appointment, was stated, the Court quashed the writ. (Rez v. The Bishop of Oxford, 7 East, 345; S. C., 3 Hils., 341). And it is requisite that the writ should state those facts which constitute the duty, and induce the obligation, in point of law, to do the thing required. Therefore, where a mandamus to a railway company suggested that the company had been required to define the deviations and complete the railway to N. and Y., but that they had refused and neglected to purchase the necessary lands between C. and N. and Y., or set out the deviations, or to make complete the railway, but there was no averment that the company had abandoned the design, or were proceeding with all convenient speed, or that a reasonable time had elapsed without proper preparations, that deviations would be expedient, it was held insufficient. (Reg. v. The Eastern Counties Railway Company, 10 Adol. & Ell. 531). But, although it is essential that such facts should be alleged as are necessary to shew that the party applying for the writ is entitled to the relief prayed, no precise form need be adopted. (Rez v. The Mayor of Nottingham, Say. 37, per Lee, C. J.)

If a writ be granted to proceed to an election, it must not be to elect a particular person. (Shuttleworth v. The Lincoln Corporation, Bulstr. 122; 2 Roll. 456, 1, 25; Com. Dig. "Mandamus," C. 2).

Thirdly, the writ must be tested the day on which it is granted by the Court; and if the party to whom it is directed reside more than forty miles from London, there must be fourteen days between the teste and return; if within forty miles, only eight days. By rule of M. T., 4 Anne, 1705, it is ordered, that, between the teste and return of every original writ of mandamus, there shall be a space of fourteen days at the least, if such writ shall be directed to any person or persons commorant or residing beyond forty miles from Westminster; and, if it be within forty miles, then there shall be eight days between the teste and return thereof; and that every writ of mandamus shall bear teste the same day on which it shall be granted by the Court. (Gude's Crown Off. Pract. 353). The mode of calculating the days is, one exclusive, the other inclusive. (Rez v. The Mayor of Dover, 1 Str. 407; 2 Salk. 434; H. T., 2 Will. 4, r. 8). Days not expressed to be clear days are to be reckoned exclusive of the first, and inclusive of the last. And this, though the case be one in which the Court, on the ground of urgency, have granted the rule for the mandamus absolute in the first instance; as where the writ issues to compel payment of money for the support of paupers: and if, without the special direction of the Court, the mandamus be so drawn as to allow less time between the teste and return, the Court will supersede the writ for irregularity. (Rez v. The Governors of the Poor of St. Andrew, Holborn, 8 Adol. & Ell. 281; Com. Dig. "Mandamus," C. 4. Quære, whether the Court, on a proper case being shewn, will direct the return to be made in a shorter time?)

Fourthly, although it was formerly held, that the defendant could not be permitted to avail himself of any objection to the writ after the return, (Rez v. York, 5 T. R. 745, per Kenyon, C. J., and Buller, J.), yet it has since been adjudged that an exception may be taken to the writ, even after the return and argument on a concilium, or on shewing cause against a rule to quash the return, (Rez v. The Margate Pier Company, 3 B. & A. 220), and at any time before a peremptory mandamus issues. (Reg. v. Powell, 1 Adol. & Ell., N. S., 352; Rez v. The St. Katherine's Dock Company, 4 B. & Adol. 360; see Reg. v. Ledgard, 1 Adol. & Ell., N. S., 624; Reg. v. Kendall, Id. 366; Rez v. St. Pancras Church Trustees, 3 Adol. & Ell. 535; 6 Adol. & Ell. 314). In a recent case, after a peremptory mandamus issued, and a rule nisi had been obtained for an attachment against the defendants, the Court permitted them, in shewing cause against this rule, to object to the first writ for defects appearing upon the face of it, and the Court, being of opinion that the writ was bad, discharged the rule and quashed the writ. (Rez v. The Mayor of Poole, 10 Law Journ., N. S., Q. B., 198). It may be here observed, as a general rule, that, if the writ is bad, nothing stated in the return will remedy the defect. (Reg. v. Hopkins, 1 Q. B. Rep. 161). Upon discovering any informality in the writ of mandamus, the party may apply to amend at any time before the return; (Reg. v. Clitheroe, 6 Mod. 133, per Holt, C. J.; Reg. v. The Mayor of Newbury, 1 Q. B. Rep. 759); but, after the return has been made and traversed, the Court will not permit an amendment. (Rez v. The Mayor of Stafford, 4 T. R. 690; see Rez v. Lyme Regis, 1 Doug. 135; Rez v. Marriott, 1 D. & R. 166). Care must be taken that no defects appear upon the face of the mandamus, and that it corresponds with the terms of the rule, otherwise the Court will quash the writ. Where a rule had been obtained for a mandamus, and the writ was taken in other terms than those warranted by the rule, and differing, not merely by adding things incidental to a mandamus, but materially enlarging the terms, the Court, on motion, quashed it, (Re v. Water Eaton, 2 Smith, 54; and see Re v. Tucker, 3 B. & C. 545; 5 D. & R. 434; Re v. Kingston-upon-Hull, Str. 578), and refused to amend the rule to support the writ according to the form in which it had issued; it being the duty of the parties, if they discover any error, to apply to amend the rule before the mandamus issues. The motion to supersede the writ cannot be made after the return is out. (Per Lee, C. J., in Whitwood, q. t., v. Jocam, B. R. M., 7 Geo. 2, MS.; said to have been so determined in Lord Raymond's time, Selw. N. P. 1085). No notice of motion is necessary previous to an application to quash the writ, although formerly held to be so. (Reg. v. Middlesex, 7 Law Journ., N. S., M. C., 68; Anon., 1 Wils. 30). It may here be observed, that all the statutes of jeofails are extended to writs of mandamus and the proceedings thereon; consequently, all defects cured by those statutes apply equally to writs of mandamus. (9 Anne, c. 20, s. 6; 4 Anne, c. 16; 32 Hen. 8, c. 30; 18 Eliz. c. 14; 37 Eliz. c. 5; 21 Jac. 1, c. 13; 16 & 17 Car. 2, c. 28).

The original writ must be served personally upon the party to whom such writ is directed: in the event of its being necessary to serve several persons, so many copies as may be requisite must then be made, reserving one for the party effecting the service. The original writ must be shewn to every one personally when the copies are served, and the original writ afterwards served personally upon the principal person mentioned therein: it being expressly stated in the original writ, (vide form), that it must be returned to the Court; and, therefore, it must be personally served upon one of the persons required to obey it, that it may be so returned; for you can only proceed against such of the parties for a contempt, in not returning the writs, who have either been served with the original writ itself, or a copy of the original writ the writ itself being shewn. (Gude's Crown Off. Pract. 183).

It is sufficient if the writ be served on such parties only as are required to perform the act omitted. Thus, if it be directed to justices of the peace for any matter to be performed at sessions, it is usual to serve the chairman and two or three of the justices who usually attend the sessions; also, the clerk of the peace, though this is not absolutely necessary. If for any matter out of sessions, it should then be served upon the particular justice or justices to whom directed. If directed to a company, service upon two or three of the acting directors and their clerk would suffice. If to a municipal corporation, then upon the mayor and one or more of the town-council and the town-clerk. The party serving the writ should then make an affidavit of such service.

Where certain justices in sessions dismissed a complaint, on the ground that they had no power to grant relief, and afterwards a rule was obtained, calling upon the justices of the county of S. to shew cause why a mandamus should not issue, commanding them to hear the appeal, upon notice of the rule to be given to the said justices, or some of them, and no cause being shewn, a mandamus issued, which was served upon those justices alone before whom the original complaint was lodged, it was held to be good service. (Re v. Tucker, 3 B. & C. 544; see Reg. v. Wills, 8 D. 717).

A CASE has been lately decided by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, (Waring v. Waring, 12 Jur. 947), which is of more interest on account of the general doctrine propounded, than of the actual decision. We may be permitted to say, that against the decision it would be difficult to find one argument founded on principle or on authority. But, on the other hand, the dicta, which are, in fact, a preliminary dissertation, metaphysical quite as much as legal, seem open to very considerable observation.

The doctrine of Waring v. Waring, stated broadly, of the introductory dissertation is to be taken as the dictum of the Privy Council, seems to be this: that as the mind is one and indivisible, it follows, that if it be diseased in part, its functions cannot be taken to be healthily exercised as to any part; or, as it is powerfully expressed in the language of the learned Lord who delivered the judgment, "If the being or essence, which we term the mind, is unsound on one subject, provided that unsoundness is at all times existing upon that subject, it is quite erroneous to suppose such a mind really sound on other subjects. It is only sound in appearance; for, if the subject of the delusion be presented to it, the unsoundness which is manifested, by believing in the suggestions of fancy as if they were realities, would break out: consequently, it is as absurd to speak of this as a really sound mind,—a mind sound when the subject of the delusion is not presented,—as it would be to say that a person had not the gout, because, his attention being diverted from the pain by some more powerful sensation, by which the person was affected, he for the moment was unconscious of his visitation. It follows, from hence, that no confidence can be placed in the acts, or in any act, of a diseased mind, however apparently rational that act may appear to be, or may in reality be. The act in question may be exactly such as a person without mental infirmity might do. But there is this difference between the two cases: the person uniformly and always of sound mind could not, at the moment of the act done, be the prey of morbid delusion, whatever subject was presented to his mind; whereas the person called partially insane,—that is to say, sometimes appearing to be of sound, sometimes of unsound mind,—would inevitably shew his subjection to the disease the instant its topic was suggested. Therefore, we can, with perfect confidence, rely on the act done by the former, because we are sure that no lurking insanity, no particular, or partial, or occasional delusion, does mingle itself with the person's act, and materially affect it. But we never can rely on the act, however rational in appearance, done by the latter, because we have no security that the lurking delusion, the real unsoundness, does not mingle itself with, or occasion, the act. We are wrong in speaking of partial unsoundness; we are less incorrect in speaking of occasional unsoundness. We should say, that the unsoundness always exists; but it requires a peculiar topic, else it lurks and appears not. But the malady is there; and, as the mind is one and the same, it is really diseased, while apparently sound; and really its acts, whatever appearance they may put on, are only the acts of a morbid or unsound mind."

Now, it appears to us, with great submission, that the question of incapacity to make a will by reason or insanity, is always the very question which the dicta above cited treat it as quite absurd to entertain, viz. whether the testator has not a healthy mind at the particular time of making the will. We think the fallacy pervading the doctrine cited, is apparent by examination of the very illustration adopted by the Court. No doubt, in common parlance, we should say of a man laid up with gout, that he had the gout, notwithstanding his attention was so forcibly arrested as to extinguish for the time his sense of its presence. But if the gout be a combination of material incidents, whereof one is action on the nerves producing pain, then, in strictness, we could not say that a man actually has the gout, if for the time his nerves are so affected by something else, that the part of the gout consisting of its action on the nerves, is destroyed or merged. And if the very question be, whether the patient is capable of some act depending on the specific agency of his nerves, and requiring the absence of foreign action upon them, then the presence or absence of that particular fraction of the total, called gout, consisting of its painful action on the nerves, would just be the test whether, for the purpose in hand, the patient had or had not the gout.

Now, applying this to the question of soundness of mind. If a testator has, as is assumed, the healthy use of the essence called mind, while certain subjects only are presented to it, and the unhealthy use of it when certain other subjects are presented, and if it be assumed, as it is, that the subjects inducing unhealthy action are not presented, is it not strictly correct to say, that, while that state of things exists, the mind is sound?—not sound generally, in the sense of being without disease, overt or latent, but sound in the sense of its healthy action being at the time complete.

The reasoning of the Court, in the latter part of the passage cited, appears to us to be inconsistent with the former part. The former part assumes that the mind is not morbidly affected, except by the presentation to it of certain subjects. The latter, that its action may be morbidly affected, although the disturbing subject is not presented to it; in the words used by the Court, that the lurking delusion—the real unsoundness—may mingle itself with or occasion the act.

There can be no doubt, however, from the concluding passage, that what the Court means to lay down is, that the mind, being, as it assumes, one and indivisible, cannot be at the same time sound and unsound; that, if it be in the remotest degree subject to unhealthy action, it is unsound; and no doubt, in one sense, this is true; but we submit that it is not true in speaking of soundness with reference to the power of testamentary disposition; because the soundness required by the law for that, is not soundness in the wide sense of the indivisible instrument called the mind, having no particle of even latent disease, but soundness in the sense of its being in a state of action unimpeded by any disease at the time of making the testamentary disposition.

The doctrine laid down arguendo in Waring v. Waring is further open to the question, whether it is accurate to consider the mind as one and indivisible, for the purpose of determining its soundness or unsoundness? We are, of course, not going to dispute whether the being or essence, as the Court terms it, is, as being or essence, one and indivisible; because, as nobody, not even the Privy Council, has the slightest knowledge what the being or essence is, it is impossible to say whether it is divisible or indivisible. But thus much we do know, that it has at least several different modes of operation, viz. that it remembers, reflects, and imagines. It is quite immaterial to dispute whether, in cases of what is termed partial insanity, the mind has one faculty, as memory, sound, and the other faculties unsound; or whether the mind is sound when exercising itself in recollecting, and unsound when reflecting on its own combinations. It is fully admitted, we believe, as matter of metaphysical knowledge, that a mind may act healthily in the exercise of one of its faculties, and unhealthily in the exercise of others; or that it may act healthily in the exercise of all its faculties upon some, and unhealthily in the exercise of all or some of its faculties upon certain other subjects of mental observation. Now, if that be so, the indivisibility of the mind as a being or an essence, and its incapability as such, of divided soundness, have no bearing upon the question of its soundness with reference to particular acts; because that is not a question of the soundness of the mind itself, but of its capability of acting healthily in the exercise of a portion of its faculties, not exercising the others for the time; or of acting healthily in the exercise of all upon certain particular subjects presented to it, to the exclusion of other particular subjects.

POINTS ON THE LAW AND PRACTICE OF INJUNCTIONS.

Of Breaches of an Injunction.—Where a defendant has committed a breach of a special injunction, it is a mixed question of fact and of construction; and it need scarcely be observed, that, a defendant having been enjoined from permitting a particular effect, capable of being produced by several causes, to be produced by a given cause, is not to be treated as guilty of a breach merely because the effect has taken place, without proof connecting the effect with the particular cause. This was held in a case of Dawson v. Power, (5 Hare, 424). The point was simply one of evidence, and seems to have been almost too clear for argument.

What may be shewn as Cause against dissolving an Injunction.—In a very recent case the Vice-Chancellor of England held, that, since the 11th Order of 1841, exceptions for impertinence cannot be shewn for cause against dissolving an injunction. (Simcoe v. Davis, 12 Sim. 46). His Honor said, "Under the New Orders of the Court, an answer cannot be referred generally for impertinence, but the matters alleged to be impertinent must be specified by way of exception. Why, then, may not the answer in this case be taken as an answer, disregarding those parts of it which have been excepted to as being impertinent?" If this decision was right under the Orders of 1841, it is so equally now under the 38th Order of 1845. But the professed reason of it seems open to this objection: that it does not answer the reason given in Goodings v. Woodham, (14 Ves. 536), viz. that as an answer cannot be excepted to for insufficiency, and as there must be a judgment upon the reference for impertinence before there can be a judgment on the insufficiency, and as exceptions for insufficiency may be shewn as cause against dissolving, all proceedings necessarily preceding them must also be sufficient cause. If, in accordance with Simcoe v. Davis, the answer is to be taken as an answer, disregarding those parts of it which are excepted to for impertinence, the result would be, that a motion to dissolve would be made upon statements in the answer, which may be afterwards successfully excepted to as insufficient.

Injunctions in Administration Suits.—In considering the protection given to an executor against creditors at law, it must be remembered that the executor takes, of course, only that which was the testator's; and that, therefore, if, at the time of the testator's death, a creditor had a lien amounting to a dominium over any part of the testator's property, the executor cannot restrain the creditor from exercising his legal right. This point arose in Ranken v. Harwood, (5 Hare, 215). In that case the creditor, Kirk, obtained a judgment in December, 1845; and on the 7th April, 1846, a writ of fi. fa. was placed in the hands of the proper officer for execution. The debtor died on the 6th April. During the lifetime of the debtor, a mortgagee's bill for an account was filed, and on his death the mortgagee filed a bill of supplement and revivor against the debtor's executor. In the two suits a decree was made in June, 1846. In July, 1846, the sheriff took possession, under the fi. fa., of certain goods of the testator; and the executor immediately moved for an injunction to restrain him from removing or selling such goods, and to restrain the creditor from proceeding in his action. Sir J. Wigram, V. C., refused the motion: he said, if the writ had been put into the hands of the sheriff before the death of the debtor, then, beyond all question, the creditor might have taken them in execution, even in the hands of a purchaser, (except in market overt), from the executor. "At the death of the testator," said his Honor, "supposing the writ to have been then in the hands of the sheriff, the creditor had a dominion over the goods paramount to that of the executor; or, in other words, the amount of the assets of the testator over which the executor had dominion, adverse to the creditor's right, was the amount of the gross assets minus the amount of the creditor's claim." Then the writ, when put into the hand of the sheriff, taking effect by relation as from the teste of the writ, (which was before the testator's death), his Honor held that the creditor could not be enjoined.

Of the Principle on which Injunctions are granted generally.—The Court never grants an injunction on the principle that it will do no harm to the defendant, if he does not intend to commit the acts complained of. But, on the other hand, if the injury has been committed, the party injured is not bound to accept the personal undertaking of the defendant that he will not continue the injury, but is entitled to the protection of an injunction. This was held in a case of Geary v. Norton, (1 De Gex & Smale, 9), in which the defendant had pirated a registered article, and, on being apprised of his fault, and that a bill and affidavit had been prepared, offered to pay the costs already incurred, and to suspend the sale of any of the pirated articles of which he was the holder. The plaintiff, nevertheless, obtained an injunction; and the defendant not offering to pay the costs of the injunction, the suit was brought to a hearing. The Court held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the protection of an injunction, and to the general costs of the suit. The defendant ought to have offered, after the injunction had been obtained, to pay the costs to that time, submitting to the injunction. It should be observed, that there was evidence to shew that the defendant was informed, before formal notice was given to him, of the intention of the plaintiff to apply.

Injunctions in Cases of Mistake.—In a very late case, where the plaintiffs had paid money into court, under a mistake as to the legal consequences of such act, and the effect of it was to give certain defendants a legal title to take the money out, the Court refused to restrain the defendants from so doing, on the ground that a mistake as to the legal consequences of an act did not call for the interference of equity. (The Great Western Railway Company v. Cripps, 5 Hare, 91).

Injunctions against Companies and others acting under Parliamentary Powers.—Generally, if parties acting under parliamentary powers exceed those powers, they will be restrained. Nevertheless, where a company entered upon a man's land, and dug a trench thereon, not strictly pursuing its powers, but it appeared such trench was merely to mark out an anticipated line of railway, and none of the soil was removed from the land, and the company never did anything more, and swore that they did not intend to go any more on the land, the Court refused to make any order, even as to costs, saying that the mischief, if any, having been done, there could be no use in an injunction. It must be observed, that, in this case, the plaintiff did not file his bill till nine days after the injury had been discovered by him, and fourteen after it had ceased. The case is obviously sui generis, and neither establishes nor controverts any general principle. (Fooks v. The Wiltshire Railway Company, 5 Hare, 199).

What destroys an Injunction.—Generally, if a bill is dismissed, the injunction goes with it, without order. On the same principle, it should seem, is founded the clear rule, that where an injunction has been obtained, and a demurrer to the whole bill is allowed, the injunction is gone, and that although leave is given to amend. (Schneider v. Ligardi, 9 Beav. 481).

When Application for Leave to amend must be made to the Court.—In Wright v. King, (9 Beav. 161), after the answers had been filed more than twelve months, a motion was made to the Court for leave to amend a bill without prejudice to the injunction; and it was held, that, as the plaintiff was desirous to amend, with an adjunct, (viz. that the amendment should be without prejudice), over which the Master had no jurisdiction, the application was properly made to the Court, and not to the Master. In this case, neither the 2nd Order of May, 1839, nor the case of Warburton v. The London and Blackwall Railway Company, (2 Beav. 253), were mentioned. It is difficult, consistently with the latter case, to see why, in Wright v. King, the application should not have been made to the Master, because it was unnecessary to have inserted in the order for liberty to amend, the words without prejudice; and, therefore, the common application, which was within the Master's jurisdiction, would have been sufficient. Probably, all that the Court meant to say was, that, if the plaintiffs desired their order to amend to contain the words without prejudice, the application must be made to the Court.

In former articles we have treated of the mode of deriving a plaintiff of costs under the County Courts Act, & 10 Vict. c. 95; and have also collected several of the decisions under that statute. (Ante, pp. 173, 181, 51). We now propose to consider the more recent cases which have occurred in relation to this subject. It has been decided that the proper course to adopt, in order to deprive the plaintiff of costs, is to apply for leave to enter a suggestion on the record, (Brooker v. Cooper, 12 Jur. 964), although sect. 129 enacts, that in cases within the act "the plaintiff shall have judgment to recover such sum only, and no costs." It has also been held, that, if a prima facie case be made out for entering such suggestion, the Court will not inquire into the doubtful point of law (e. g. whether bills of exchange are within the act) which may be raised on the record after the suggestion is entered. It is sufficient if the affidavit brings the case within sects. 128 and 129*. It need not negative any grounds for refusing the suggestion not mentioned therein; e. g. that plaintiff is not an attorney, or that the case is excepted by sect. 129; but it is for the other party to shew such grounds, if they exist. (Butler v. Corney, 17 Law Journ., N. S., Exch., 265). This case was recognised and acted upon by the Court of Common Pleas in Hayter and Another v. Fish, (12 Jur. 1004; see form of affidavit, ante, p. 32). The rule granted is only a rule to shew cause, even though notice be given of the intention to move for it. (Moore v. Waldron, 12 Jur. 1007). And, if made absolute, it is not with costs, as the plaintiff may averse the suggestion; and, therefore, the costs should abide the result. (Hayter v. Fish, 12 Jur. 1004; San- son v. Price, 17 Law Journ., N. S., Exch., 205). With regard to the parties subject to the jurisdiction of the county courts, although attorneys as plaintiffs are exempt, (Lewis v. Hance, 12 Jur. 375; Jones v. Brown, 17 Law Journ., N. S., Exch., 163), yet they are not privileged from being sued in them as defendants. (Jefferies v. Beart, 12 Jur. 1003). In that case the statute was held to apply to trials before the sheriff, although he cannot certify to deprive of costs under sect. 129; but it was suggested by Wightman, J., that there should be inserted in the order for the writ of trial, "with liberty to the judge of the inferior court to certify."

It has lately been argued in the Exchequer, that actions on bills of exchange are not within the act, (Butler v. Corney, supra), because such instruments do not give a cause of action arising within any jurisdiction. (See sect. 128, and Mondel v. Steele, 8 Mee. & W. 640). It was not necessary to decide the point, but it had formerly been determined by Coleridge, J., that the statute does apply to negotiable instruments. (Nind v. Rhodes, 17 Law Journ., N. S., Q. B., 179).

The act does not apply where the action is commenced before a court has been established for the district in which the cause of action arose. (Harries v. Lawrence, 17 Law Journ., N. S., Ex., 101; Parker v. Crouch, Id. 131).

An application for a certiorari to remove a cause from a county court should be made to a judge at chambers, and not to the Court. (Ex parte Bowen, 12 Jur. 964). The certificate may issue ex parte, and without notice to the other party, if the judge thinks proper. (Symonds v. Dimsdale, 17 Law Journ., N. S., Ex., 247).

It has been decided, that where a clerk of a county court has given orders to fit up the court-house, neither the fact of his being such clerk, nor the substance of law in the case which has just been of great interest. It is this: whether there a right of property in the knowledge that he possesses or has done certain things?

and the Prince Consort have, it appears, intervals of their leisure, applied themselves to production of certain works of art, viz. etchings of as well as domestic and other subjects. Those have found their way, let it be admitted, entirely, and wholly against the will of the artist, into the hands of a stranger. A third person obtains from that stranger a catalogue of the etchings produced by the royal artists; and the question is, is there that right of property, not in the catalogue,—for it is not pretended that her Majesty or the Prince made the catalogue,—but in the knowledge of the facts, of which the catalogue is but the record, which will entitle the authors of the etchings to restrain the publication of a catalogue of them? In the argument of the case, authorities were cited to shew that the author of a work may restrain another person from publishing his work, contrary to his will; that the student attending lectures may not publish the matter of them; that the person hearing a play may not print the dialogue of the play; and the like. But no authority was cited, for the simple reason, that no authority exists on the question, whether a person producing or possessing works of art or objects of vertu, has a right of property of this kind, that he can prevent another, not from copying or using those objects of art or of vertu, but from publishing to the world the fact that they exist? This is the true, and in fact only legal, question, in The Attorney-General v. Strange and Prince Albert v. Strange.
There is, or may be, besides, a purely equitable question, viz. whether, supposing the Queen and the Prince to have no such right of property as that contended for, the defendant Strange is not affected by implication with a fiduciary or confidential character, which makes it in him, whatever it might be in a stranger, wholly without privity, a fraud on the Queen and the Prince, to use the knowledge obtained by him of the fact of their having produced certain works of art, in any way inconsistent with the confidence reposed in him.
This question arises in the following manner:—The plaintiffs, her Majesty and the Prince, employed their private printer, Brown, to print copies of their etchings.
The printer had a workman, Middleton, who surreptitiously printed some copies of these etchings, and gave or sold them to one of the defendants, Judge. The defendant Strange agreed with Judge to print copies of the etchings, and print a catalogue of them. Whether he obtained the copies, does question is, assuming

matter of the contract, raises any legal presumption to exclude his personal liability for the expenses incurred. (Autey v. Hutchinson, 12 Jur. 962).

THE cases of The Attorney-General v. Strange and Prince Albert v. Strange, heard on the 13th and 14th instant, before the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, which are, in effect, but one case, have excited, and deservedly, great interest, both in the public and among the members of the Legal Profession. In the public, principally on account of the novelty and the supposed constitutional character of the exhibition of a Sovereign suing, in respect of private rights, in one of her own courts; in the Legal Profession, on account of the novelty of the point sought to be established in reference to property, on the part of the plaintiff.

On the first point, much error, not perhaps of any very mischievous tendency, appears to prevail; and that error was considerably strengthened by the eloquent introduction to the argument addressed to the Court by one of the defendant's junior counsel, who commented brilliantly on the contrast between the power and majesty of the position of the Sovereign of this country, and the gracious condescension manifested by her appearing as a suitor in her own court. Now, if the learned counsel meant to say that the condescension consisted in her Majesty being so far destitute of royal hauteur as to prefer submitting her claims to the decision of a Court of Equity, to foregoing them altogether, he was right; but if the tendency of his observations was to make it supposed by the public that the Queen had any choice between giving up her claims and submitting them to legal decision, then such tendency was to foster in the public mind a very great error. Her Majesty has most clearly no prerogative whatever which could be called in aid to enforce a claim of a purely private kind, such as that brought forward in The Attorney-General v. Strange. She could not, as we believe, by any exercise of authority vested in her by the constitution, or by any other process than that which she has adopted, prevent the invasion of the rights claimed. So that when attention is called to the spectacle of the Sovereign coming before one of her own judges, appointed by herself, pari passu with one of her own subjects, instead of coming to assert any high prerogative, an image is presented to the public thus far false, that, by implication, it would seem to suggest that the Queen could have protected her claims by some high prerogative, and that because the judges are appointed by her, therefore her claims to rights can only be submitted to them by an act of condescension.

The truth is, that the rights of the Sovereign are as much dependent for their existence upon the law, as the rights of any of her subjects. When, therefore, the Queen claims any rights, and they are disputed, her claims must be either determined by the judges, to whom the exposition of the law is intrusted, or given up. It would be, perhaps, proper to attribute to her Majesty a sound and constitutional feeling, most deserving of approbation in the eyes of Englishmen, to say that she has that fair and just appreciation of the value of rights, that, rather than suffer her rights to be trampled upon by an unprincipled opponent, she will expose the discussion of them to the appointed tribunals of the country; but to talk of her Majesty's condescension in seeking justice in the only mode in which the institutions of the country afford it to the Sovereign as well as to her subjects, instead of commencing upon her fair and honest desire to enforce her just rights, is that sort of compliment to the Queen which consists in praising for a merit which has no existence, and overlooking the merit which does really exist.

The question of law in the case which has just been argued is of great interest. It is this: whether there is in any person a right of property in the knowledge of the fact that he possesses or has done certain things? Her Majesty and the Prince Consort have, it appears, in the intervals of their leisure, applied themselves to the production of certain works of art, viz. etchings of historical as well as domestic and other subjects. Those etchings have found their way, let it be admitted, wrongfully, and wholly against the will of the artists, into the hands of a stranger. A third person obtains from that stranger a catalogue of the etchings produced by the royal artists; and the question is, is there that right of property, not in the catalogue,—for it is not pretended that her Majesty or the Prince made the catalogue,—but in the knowledge of the facts, of which the catalogue is but the record, which will entitle the authors of the etchings to restrain the publication of a catalogue of them? In the argument of the case, authorities were cited to shew that the author of a work may restrain another person from publishing his work, contrary to his will; that the student attending lectures may not publish the matter of them; that the person hearing a play may not print the dialogue of the play; and the like. But no authority was cited, for the simple reason, that no authority exists on the question, whether a person producing or possessing works of art or objects of vertu, has a right of property of this kind, that he can prevent another, not from copying or using those objects of art or of vertu, but from publishing to the world the fact that they exist! This is the true, and in fact only legal, question, in The Attorney-General v. Strange and Prince Albert v. Strange. There is, or may be, besides, a purely equitable question, viz. whether, supposing the Queen and the Prince to have no such right of property as that contended for, the defendant Strange is not affected by implication with a fiduciary or confidential character, which makes it in him, whatever it might be in a stranger, quod without privity, a fraud on the Queen and the Prince, to use the knowledge obtained by him of the fact of their having produced certain works of art, in any way inconsistent with the confidence reposed in him.

This question arises in the following manner:—The plaintiffs, her Majesty and the Prince, employed their private printer, Brown, to print copies of their etchings. The printer had a workman, Middleton, who surreptitiously printed some copies of these etchings, and gave or sold them to one of the defendants, Judge. The defendant Strange agreed with Judge to print copies of the etchings, and printed a catalogue of them. Whether Strange knew how Judge had obtained the copies, does not appear in evidence; and the question is, assuming that Middleton was employed by the printer, Brown, whether there is confidence reposed, directly or by implication, by the plaintiff in Middleton; and, if there is, whether there is to be presumed in Strange, the defendant, such notice of the confidence and the fraud as to affect him, and make him liable to be restrained, not on the ground of any right of property in the plaintiff, but on the ground of breach of confidence in a person filling a fiduciary character?

This question will probably not have to be determined at present, if at all; because, by some oversight or accident, the evidence on the part of the plaintiffs of the fact of Middleton, the workman, being employed by Brown, the Queen's printer, could not, according to the practice of the Court, be read on the motion to dissolve the injunction obtained ex parte. The Court will, therefore, have to determine the question of breach of confidence, in the absence of any evidence whether the person from whom the defendant Judge obtained the etchings was not wholly a stranger to the plaintiff; in other words, in the absence of any evidence whatever, to shew how the defendants became possessed of the means of making the catalogue.

To the Legal Profession this accident will probably be a gain, because it will increase the probabilities of the Court being under the necessity of deciding the very curious legal question raised. If the Court could have decided upon the motion before it to dissolve the injunction, upon the purely equitable grounds of breach of confidence, it is highly probable, that, according to the invariable and probably very proper practice of judges, it would have declined to decide the new and very difficult question of property. But now, since the question of breach of confidence is in that state, owing to the absence of evidence, that the Court may be unable to treat it as a question at all, the result will probably be, that the motion will be dealt with according to the opinion formed by the Court on the question of legal right of property.

OPINIONS of the PRESS.
"This volume is very comprehensive. Its peculiar feature is its List of the Attorneys in England and Wales, placed, as in the Law List, under the several towns in which they practise, and the names of their London agents. Much time has been given to its preparation this year, and so far as we have been able to test it, it appears to be singularly complete. Other matters, usually found in Legal Diaries and Almanacs, are added, with some Original Papers on Legal Topics. Altogether, it is a work of great labour, very useful, and very cheap."—The Law Times, Nov. 18, 1848.

"To every branch of the Legal Profession this yearly periodical is of the utmost convenience and utility. It is a valuable compendium of information on many subjects of practical interest, and, as a work of reference, is admirably adapted to communicate knowledge and economize time. . . . No legal man's chambers are complete without it."—Liverpool Advertiser.

"It is one of the most useful and comprehensive Year Books published, and forms an invaluable acquisition to the chambers of the barrister, the offices of the attorney, and the counting-house of the merchant."—Chancery.

THE present seems to be a period destined to exhaust the learning upon rights of publication. But recently the question was raised and determined how far the custom of a trade will operate to give a right to the public use of words and music combined, where one of the two is separately the subject of copyright. Still more recently has the question been raised as to the right of restraining one person from publishing an account of another's literary productions, when publishing that account might be a profitable use of the property in the productions themselves. And we have now, not a new claim of right, but a sort of doubt attempted to be thrown on a claim of right long admitted in practice, viz. the claim of right in the Judges of a court to prohibit the publication of pending proceedings. We allude, of course, to the discussions upon the order made by the Judges in Ireland, in the case of The Queen v. Duffy, prohibiting the publication of the proceedings.

Good may, and probably does, frequently result from the publication of a part of pending proceedings, but that, especially in criminal cases, much evil may result from it, is beyond contest; and though the practice has been generally tolerated for many years, it does not at all follow that it is legal. So far as there is authority on the subject, it is quite in the contrary direction, viz. that the practice is not legal. In Deacon v. Deacon (2 Russ. 607) there is a very strong dictum of Lord Eldon's on the subject. In that case it was incidentally mentioned to the Chancellor, on a motion to dissolve an ex parte injunction, that great injury had been done to the defendant by the circulation of a newspaper containing an ex parte statement of the case; whereupon his Lordship stated, that, when he came into Westminster Hall, it was clearly understood to be the law, that part of a depending case was not to be published; and no lawyer could have been found who would have entertained a contrary opinion. "If such was the law then," he continued, "I know not by what authority it can have been changed, if changed it has been." No decision was pronounced of course, because the case was not regularly before the Court. However, doubt did not appear to enter his Lordship's mind on the subject.

Nor does it seem that there can be any doubt of the power of Courts to prohibit publication of their proceedings. The question is not one of copyright, or any other right of property, but of the inherent right of Courts to authorise the publication of their proceedings, resting upon grounds of public policy. In the case of Millar v. Taylor, (4 Mer. 2303), Willis, C. J., says, arguendo, "The Courts of Westminster Hall have the sole power to authorise and authenticate the publication of their own proceedings." Hence, the practice in the olden time of the reports of law proceedings always being in terms printed pursuant to the permission of the Judges, bearing a certificate of allowance on their title-page. Hence also, no doubt as a remnant of a practice considered to be by law essential, the practice still subsisting, according to which the Courts will not hold themselves bound to permit any reports to be cited, but those compiled by the reporter whose reports they formally authorise.

But, independently of the right to authorise publication, implying the right to withhold authorisation, it is plain that Courts of law must have the right to prohibit publication of their proceedings, at least pending those proceedings, in this way. Courts of law are not, as of right, open to the public. In practice, they are always opened to the public; but it is quite a mistake to suppose that the public can insist upon being present. Beyond all question, the right exists in the Courts to exclude all but the parties and their agents. And this right is, in fact, continually exercised when the parties desire it, and the Judge thinks the case a proper one to be heard in private; and the most eminent Judges, and among them some of those most attached to popular liberty, have repeatedly, and without challenge, ordered their courts to be cleared, if the public conducted itself in any manner inconsistent with the rules laid down for preserving the decorum of judicial proceedings. This being so, of course the parties and their agents may lawfully be restrained from publishing reports of the pending proceedings; and that on this ground, if on no other—that the parties and their agents, having submitted themselves to the jurisdiction, must conform to the rules laid down by the Court for the conduct of its proceedings, or be guilty of a contempt; it being unquestionable, that, subject to the interference of Parliament, every Court of record has inherent jurisdiction to regulate its own proceedings, and to commit for contempt any person, at least any person within its jurisdiction, who disobeys its rules.

Now, if the Court has authority to exclude the public, it follows that the public attending, attends not de jure, but dum bene se gesserit: it attends by permission, on the implied understanding that it will do nothing inconsistent with the rules laid down by the Court; in fact, submitting itself, for all purposes of conduct with reference to the Court, to the jurisdiction. Hence it is a contempt of Court in any person to publish proceedings contrary to the order of the Court; although, by common practice, if the Court makes no order, it is assumed that it permits reports.

Whether, if a person present at proceedings of a court of law, could commit them to memory, and repeat them to a stranger, and that person were to publish them, the Court could commit either party for contempt, may, perhaps, be a question. But we apprehend, that, if any defect of this sort existed at law, a Court of equity would, in such a case, imply fraud, and grant an injunction, not on any ground of property, but on grounds of public policy in aid of a defective jurisdiction.

We have before seen that there must be either eight or fourteen days between the teste and return, according to the circumstances of the case, (ante, chap.), at the expiration of which period the parties to whom the writ is directed (Com. Dig. "Mandamus," D. 1) must duly make a return, otherwise an attachment will issue for the contempt; and this, though the parties to whom the writ be directed have not been duly elected to the office they fill, because, until removal, they remain as such officers, and must, therefore, answer the writ. (Reg. v. Olitheroe, 6 Mod. 133).

All parties named in the writ may join in the return, or, if the parties disagree, a separate return may be made upon the original writ, or copies which they have received; but where a return is made and filed as a joint return, the parties cannot afterwards disavow it. (Gude's Crown Office Pract. 184). Therefore, if a mandamus be directed to several, as the mayor, bailiffs, and burgesses, and the mayor alone make a return, the others cannot repudiate it, although contrary to the consent of the majority; for the Court will not examine upon affidavits whether there was a consent of the majority, but leave the parties to punish the mayor for the misdemeanor, if he be guilty, and, for this purpose, will grant a rule for a criminal information. (Rex v. Abingdon, Salk. 431; S. C., Carth. 499. But see Reg. v. S. Saviour's, Southwark, 7 Adol. & Ell. 925, 931).

The return must, in all cases, be made to the first writ of mandamus. (9 Anna, c. 20, s. 1; 11 Geo. 1, c. 4, s. 9).

If the party or parties to whom the writ is directed, and the copies served, fail to make a return on the day the writ is returnable, the prosecutor should search at the Crown Office the day after if no return be made. He may then, if unprepared with an affidavit of the service of the original writ and copies, take out a side-bar rule at the Crown Office, (see Rule 2, G., C. P., 654), requiring the party or parties to whom the writ was directed, and who were served with the original writ and copies, to return the same within six days next after service thereof. The rule must then be served upon the same parties on whom the original writ and copies were served, but the service need not be personal. As it is, however, not usual for the Court to grant an attachment, but only a rule nisi, upon an affidavit of service of the side-bar rule and also of the original writ and copies, it is more advisable for the party prosecuting to be prepared with an affidavit of service of the original writ and copies, in the first instance, to avoid the proceeding of a side-bar rule, as the Court will, upon production of an affidavit of the service of the writ and copies only, on motion, grant a rule nisi for an attachment, without resorting to a side-bar rule. The trouble and delay of a side-bar rule and service may thus be avoided. (Gude's Crown Office Pract. 185).

Before the stat. 9 Anne, c. 20, the prosecutor was compelled to issue an alias and pluries writ previous to moving for an attachment. By sect. 1 of that statute, in all cases where parties are required to make a return, they must do so to the first writ of mandamus. The Court, however, or a judge at chambers, may, on application, allow the party further time to make the return. (Sect. 6).

The return must be made by indorsing the subject-matter thereof on the back of the writ; if it be insufficient to contain the whole, a schedule may be annexed. If the latter course be adopted, the writ or copy must be indorsed, thus:—"The execution of this writ appears by the schedule hereto annexed. The answer of A. B." &c. It must be signed by the party, or the name of the corporation to whom addressed. It need not be upon oath, although the Court may require it to be so. (Com. Dig. "Mandamus," D. 2). The rule of law for regulating the return is, that wherever a mandamus is directed to a party to do some act, or to shew some cause to the contrary, it is competent to return as many causes for excuse as they may think fit, provided such excuses are not inconsistent. If any one is held sufficient, no peremptory mandamus will be awarded. (Rex v. The Mayor of London, 10 Adol. & Ell. 271, 272). The Court, however, will in no case direct how the return shall be made. (Com. Dig. "Mandamus," D.) It must be positive and certain, (Bagg's case, 11 Rep. 99 b; Rex v. Abingdon, 2 Salk. 431), and should set out clearly all the facts necessary to support it, in order that the Court may judge as to the sufficiency of the matters so returned. (Rex v. Liverpool, 2 Burr. 731; Brathwaite's case, Vent. 19; Bagg's case, 11 Rep. 99 b). The same certainty is required as in indictments or returns to writs of habeas corpus, (Rex v. Lyne Regis, Doug. 153, per Buller, J.) If it be certain on the face of it, that is sufficient; and the Court cannot intend facts inconsistent with it for the purpose of making it bad. (Id. 154). Where it consists of several independent matters, not inconsistent with each other, part of which are good in law, and part bad, it will suffice, because the Court may quash the return as to so much as is bad, and put the prosecutor to plead to or traverse the rest; but if two causes are returned, inconsistent one with the other, the whole will be bad, because the Court cannot determine which is the true one, and an objection may well be taken to the whole return, (Res v. Cambridge, 2 T. R. 461; Res v. York, 5 T. R. 66; Res v. Norwich, 2 Ld. Raym. 1244; Res v. Lyme Regis, Doug. 149), on the ground of being repugnant and contradictory. (Reg. v. Old Hall Manor, 10 Adol. & Ell. 248; Res v. The Mayor of London, supra). The return need not answer the words, but the materiality of the writ. (Res v. Lyme Regis, supra, per Mansfield, C. J.) If it disclose a fair legal reason why the mandamus should not be obeyed, it is enough; (Res v. York, 6 T. R. 491); nor will the return be invalid by reason of an erroneous judgment exercised in performing the act required. Thus, where a mandamus was directed to an inferior Court, commanding them to give judgment in a certain cause, if it sets out an erroneous judgment given below, it will not vitiate the return, for the Court above will not enter into the question whether it be so or not. It is a sufficient compliance with the terms of the writ, if it appear they have done what the Court required of them. (Res v. The Justices of Yorkshire, 7 T. R. 467; Reg. v. Old Hall Manor, 10 Adol. & Ell. 248. See Res v. Suddis, 1 East, 306).

The number of the causes returned makes no difference, as before said, provided they be consistent; therefore, to a mandamus to admit or shew cause to the contrary, the defendant is at liberty to return one or more, or any number of causes. (Wright v. Fawcett, 1 Burr. 2044; Res v. The Mayor of London, 3 B. & Adol. 255; Reg. v. Norwich, 2 Ld. Raym. 1244; S. C., 1 Salk. 436). A return, that L. C. was not duly elected, according to ancient custom; that there is a custom for the inhabitants, &c. to remove at pleasure; and that L. C. was removed pursuant to such custom, is good. (Res v. Taunton, Cowp. 413). A return, stating generally that the body was duly assembled to remove, &c., held sufficient; (Res v. Doncaster, 2 Ld. Raym. 391); and if it be stated, that a party was removed by the corporate body at large, it is unnecessary to aver that the power of removing is vested in them, because it is incidental to them, unless given by the charter or a bye-law, &c. to a select party. (Res v. Lyme Regis, Doug. 177). So a return, that B. was not a burgess, that he was not eligible to the office of common-councillor, and that he was not elected, is good, and not inconsistent. (Res v. Cambridge, 2 T. R. 456). To a mandamus to the commissioners of sewers to make a rate to reimburse the applicant, they returned, that the writ was not delivered till the 12th February, and that their commission expired in four days after, and, therefore, they had not time to make a rate, was held good; the Court saying, they could not grant a peremptory mandamus, as there was nobody who had power to execute it. (Res v. The Commissioners of Sewers, 2 Str. 763; 2 Ld. Raym. 1479, S. C.; Res v. Richardson, 1 Wils. 21). So, to a mandamus to the bishop to grant a license to a clergyman, who was nominated to a grammar-school, a return, stating that a caveat was lodged against his admission, on account of misconduct, and that the bishop was proceeding to enquire into the truth, was held good, because the bishop must first examine into the qualifications of the candidate. (Res v. The Bishop of Litchfield, 2 Str. 1023; see also Res v. York, 6 T. R. 490). And to a mandamus to restore, a return of resignation, and election of another to the office, is a good return. (Res v. Rippon, Salk. 433). To a mandamus to the judge of the spiritual court to grant probate of a will, it is a good return, that a suit is depending concerning the validity of the will of which probate is demanded. (Res v. Hay, 4 Burr. 2296; Res v. Bettesworth, 2 Str.

1111). So, to a mandamus to appoint overseers, a return, that the place was not a village or township, and that it is extra-parochial, was held good. (Res v. Welbeck, 2 Str. 1143). So, to justices to hear a complaint before them, a return, that they had heard and determined, was held good; (Res v. Richardson, 1 Wils. 21; Res v. The Justices of Yorkshire, 7 T. R. 467); without setting out in what way they had decided, because, if erroneous, the Court could not inquire into it on an application for a mandamus. (Reg. v. Old Hall Manor, 10 Adol. & Ell. 257). So, to justices to register and certify a dissenting meeting-house, the justices may return, that they are not within the qualifications of the act. (Res v. Derby, 4 Burr. 1991; see 1 W. & M., st. 1, c. 18, ss. 1 and 19). If a return follows the suggestion of the writ, it will suffice. (Res v. Penrice, 2 Str. 1235).

LONDON, DECEMBER 30, 1848.

THE Incorporated Law Society has put forth a sort of manifesto, printed in another part of this Number, under the title of "Rules of Practice relating to the Retainers of Counsel," adopted by a special general meeting of that Society. We suppose their next performance will be, rules relating to the manner in which counsel shall dress, or the style in which their chambers shall be kept; for the Incorporated Law Society can have just about the same authority in the one matter as the other.

We do not, certainly, object to the endeavour to have the rules of practice as to retainers settled; it would be very convenient that they should be so; but, we apprehend, it would be more consistent with a due regard to the rights and powers of the Bar, if the Incorporated Law Society had inquired what are the rules of practice adopted and recognised by the Bar as to retainers, and suggested objections, if objections fairly occurred, instead of laying down what rules shall in future govern the Bar. We have always advocated, to the fullest extent,—many persons have thought, to a foolish and quixotic extent,—the rights of clients and their agents, the solicitors and attorneys, to the services of counsel. We have done so, however, with reference to principles and rules already established; but it is really too extravagant a claim, on the part of the public and their agents, to say that they are to make new rules, referring to their intercourse with counsel, which are to be binding upon counsel: in other words, that in what is, in a sense, a matter of contract or arrangement between two parties, one is to make terms to bind the other. If there exist at present a certain rule as to any given question of retainer, by what authority can clients say that that rule shall be abolished, and counsel shall be bound by a new rule, to the making of which they have not assented? Of course, any solicitor, or any body of solicitors, can refuse to retain counsel; except on the understanding that the retainer is to have a particular duration and effect; but, on the other hand, the Bar has as unquestionable a right to say that they will not acquiesce in the doctrine of retainer at all, or that, if they take retainers, they will accept them only on given conditions. The point is too clear for argument; and we shall, therefore, at once pass from it to the consideration of the merits of the proposed rules, not doubting that the Bar will be willing to sanction all that is really reasonable and beneficial to the public in them.

Now, some of the proposed rules are very rational; some are and some are not consistent with existing practice; and of some, the principle is altogether vicious. Of the latter class are those which require counsel to give notice to a client, whose retainer is either wholly or partially inoperative, before he accepts a retainer or brief from the opposite party. Such a liability to give notice is one that ought not to exist as a duty, because it entails on counsel a proceeding in many cases exceedingly onerous, and likely to breed confusion, and in others utterly at variance with all delicacy of feeling.

Suppose a general retainer to have been given to Mr. A., who practises in Chancery; a proceeding is instituted against his client at law, in which the opposing party, requiring, perhaps, an able conveyancer's argument, and thinking highly of Mr. A., offers him a brief; the counsel, before taking it, is to give notice to his Chancery client; in other words, to ask whether he will give him a brief. Can anything be more unpleasant to the feelings, nay derogatory to the position of the counsel? Can anything be more unpleasant to the solicitor, than to have to say to his counsel, "I do not want you." Such is the position in which the trine of notice puts both parties. Apply the doctrine to the case of senior counsel in full practice, and its inconvenience will be manifest. Mr. A. has a special retainer for the plaintiff in a cause of B. v. C.: he will have probably twenty other retainers for the plaintiff in twenty other causes; any given number of these retainers fails, and the causes, or some of them, are coming on to be heard on a given day. On the preceding day the defendants tender briefs to Mr. A., the plaintiffs not having done so; Mr. A. cannot accept, and of course, cannot read any of those briefs till he has given notice to the plaintiffs, and had their answers. He is, therefore, precluded from giving his services to the defendants during a considerable portion of the time at his disposal, in order to give the plaintiffs an opportunity of saying they do not require them. Looking at the carelessness in preserving their retainers, which such a system would inevitably engender in solicitors, we apprehend that the rule suggested would be a most mischievous one. In this, as in other legal matters, vigilantibus non dormientibus should be the rule. If counsel are worth retaining at all, they are worth the trouble of keeping the retainer alive; and the counsel ought not to be put to the trouble of serving notices, and the degradation of a quasi application for briefs, to save the solicitor the trouble of a little thought and attention. Part of the same reasoning applies to the proposed rule, that junior counsel having drawn pleadings or advised for one party, cannot, without notice, accept a retainer from, or draw pleadings for, or advise the other party. But here there are additional reasons against the rule. Pleadings or opinions are often prepared for, or given to, casual clients, who consult the particular counsel in the particular case, for reasons with which he has nothing to do, and never asks. Having drawn the pleadings or given the opinion, he hears no more of his clients, perhaps for months. They are perfect strangers to him. If they intend to retain him, they know where to find him. If they do not, why should he be required to go through the form of giving to them a notice which can have but one answer, viz. that they do not require his services?

It is perfectly obvious, that this proposed rule of expecting counsel once employed on behalf of one party to decline a retainer or brief on behalf of his opponent, without first giving notice to the party originally employing or retaining, is nothing more than a quaint, we will not say a cunning, for it is a very shallow device, for saving solicitors from the trouble of thinking whether they wish to retain, and from the further trouble of actually retaining the counsel whom they have first employed.

The 5th and 12th of the proposed rules are in direct opposition to the existing practice, and cannot be expected to be noticed by senior counsel. The present undoubted practice is, that if a Queen's counsel is retained, his retainer fails, if on any occasion an application is made in open court without giving him a brief. We say nothing about the question, whether it is a good or a bad practice; but it is the practice, as firmly settled as the practice that a bill must be signed by counsel. The practice proposed is, to transfer to the solicitor the right of determining that a leading counsel shall be bound by his retainer, whether, on any application to the Court, a brief is delivered to him or not. We can only say, that if the senior counsel acquiesce in this species of dictation, their silk gowns are but a mockery and a snare, and are scarcely worth more than the noise of their superior rustle.

Subject to the foregoing observations, the rules proposed by the Incorporated Law Society appear to us, in the main, rational, and fit to be adopted by the Bar; but, before concluding, we would wish to offer this remark: that solicitors and their clients make a very great mistake, if they imagine, that, because counsel have prepared pleadings, or advised, or held a brief, therefore they are likely, should they be engaged by the opposite party, to carry into the enemy's camp their previously acquired knowledge. In the first place, counsel, extensively employed, make a point of forgetting every pleading they have drawn, or brief they have held, as soon as the business is concluded; if they did not, they could never keep a clear mind. In the next place, counsel are trained specially to the habit of looking only at the information before them, and would no more think of defeating a defendant by means of some knowledge acquired in that defendant's service, unless it appears in the plaintiff's brief and evidence, than they would of asking a judge to decide upon his preconceived notions, instead of the evidence in the cause before him.

It is satisfactory to us, in closing the year, to be enabled to remind our readers that the view taken by a writer in this work some time ago, (9 Jur. 514), upon the point doubted in Story v. Tonge, (7 Beav. 91), and afterwards the subject of several decisions, has been confirmed in a very recent case, not yet reported, by the Lord Chancellor, overruling Hall v. Hugonin, (14 Sim. 595), and Bishopp v. Colebrook, (11 Jur. 793); so that we may now reverse the statement that we were compelled to make in a former leading article (11 Jur. 406) on the authority of the cases last mentioned, and say, that it must now be considered settled, almost beyond the possibility of dispute, that the reversionary interest of a married woman in personalty not settled to her separate use, is not, by any contrivance, however cunning, capable of being barred. We are not yet in possession of any accurate note of the Lord Chancellor's judgment on this important point, but a report of it will be inserted at the earliest possible opportunity.

MASTERS IN CHANCERY.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed the following gentlemen Masters Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery:—Lawrence Pemberton Rowley, of Bilston, Staffordshire; Rowland Varley, of Bolton-le-Moors, Lancashire; George Williams, of Cardiff, Glamorganshire; Alfred Carter, of Coventry, Warwickshire; Thomas Phillips the younger, of Plymouth, Devonshire.

MEMBERS RETURNED TO SERVE IN PARLIAMENT.—Edmund Denison, Esq., for the county of York, (West Riding), in the room of the Right Hon. George William Frederick Howard, commonly called Viscount Morpeth, now Earl of Carlisle, called up to the House of Peers.—The Hon. Edward Henry Stanley, for the Borough of King's Lynn, in the room of William George Frederick Cavendish Bentinck, commonly called Lord William George Frederick Cavendish Bentinck, deceased.

Revisé.

[William Blackwood & Sons, London and Edinburgh, 1847.]

Mr. Hosack mentions in his Preface that the idea of this treatise was suggested by the work of the late Professor Story, from which, he adds, he has derived much valuable assistance. As we feel some confidence that Mr. Hosack's work, if well executed, will prove very useful to the practitioner, we beg to caution him, and we hope our caution will reach him in time, against placing much reliance on any assistance to be obtained from Professor Story, whose compilations are not remarkable for the light they throw upon any dark question, and are besides not always entitled to the praise of accuracy and consequent trustworthiness.

Mr. Hosack, in a well-written Introduction, containing a clear and condensed account of the rise of the new branch of jurisprudence which forms the subject of his work, says, that the cause of many of the most important differences now existing between the laws of England and those of Scotland was the war occasioned by the claim of Edward the Third to the Crown of France. But it was rather the claim of Edward the First upon the Crown of Scotland, and the twenty years' war of independence that arose out of that claim, that produced the effect mentioned. From that time the relation of the two countries to each other was completely altered. We no longer find the same persons, as before, in the cases of the Umfravills, the Comyns, the Bruces, barons of both kingdoms*. The close alliance between Scotland and France was one of the consequences of this, as the separation between Scotland and England, in customs and laws, was another.

The following is a list of the contents of this first part of Mr. Hosack's work:—Chap. 1. General Rules of International Law. Chap. 2. On Domicile, as it affects Civil Status and Succession. Chap. 3. Civil Status—Legitimacy. Chap. 4. Civil Status—Minority and Guardianship—Lunatics and Aliens. Chap. 5. The Marriage Contract. Chap. 6. Effect of Marriage on the Property of the Husband and Wife. Chap. 7. Divorce.

The second part, Mr. Hosack informs us, in his Preface, will contain the Law of Real and Personal Succession, Contracts, and Bankruptcy.

In stating (pp. 58 et seq.) the much-discussed case of Doe d. Birtwhistle v. Vardill†, (5 B. & C. 438; 9 Bligh, 32; West, 500), Mr. Hosack gives considerable prominence to Lord Brougham's comments thereon, and likewise quotes Professor Story, as approving of those comments, and as confessing himself wholly unable to reconcile the decisions.

In the cases of Sheddan v. Patrick and Strathmore v. Bowes, (cited 9 Bligh, N. S., 51, 52), it was decided, that certain parties were, as Lord Redesdale said, "bastard by the law of their birthplace, and therefore bastard in Scotland, where the rights claimed respected real estate." In the case of Doe d. Birtwhistle v. Vardill‡ was decided, that a person legitimate by the law of Scotland, to all intents and purposes could, nevertheless,

* Gilbert de Umfravill, indeed, was still summoned to the English Parliament as Earl of Angus, from 27th January, 6 Edw. 2, 1332, to 26th August, 4 Rich. 2, 1380. His father and grandfather had likewise been summoned to the English Parliament as "Comites de Angos."

† Mr. Hosack cites part of the reference to this case thus: 9 Bligh Rep.; 1 West, Appeal Cases." In English law, the page is always given; this obviously saves time and trouble to those using the reference; and the usual abbreviations may be found in any of the catalogues of modern law books.

less, not inherit real estate in England, because the legitimation was effected per subsequens matrimonium; and the law of England had distinctly declared that such a legitimation was not sufficient for the purpose of inheriting land in England; this particular rule of the English law having, to borrow the words of Chief Justice Tindal, in delivering the opinion of the judges, "been framed for the direct purpose of excluding, in the descent of land in England, the application of the rule of the civil and canon law, by which the subsequent marriage between the father and mother was held to make the son born before marriage legitimate." We cannot perceive that there is here any inconsistency, or that the cases of Sheddan v. Patrick and Strathmore v. Bowes could be in any degree made to govern the case of Doe d. Birtwhistle v. Vardill. There is a general rule, and there is an exception to that general rule. The general rule is, that persons illegitimate by the law of their birthplace are illegitimate everywhere else. The exception in the case of England is as stated above. The cases of Sheddan v. Patrick and Strathmore v. Bowes fall under the general rule; and the case of Doe d. Birtwhistle v. Vardill falls under the exception. Lord Brougham says: "Your Lordships declared that the lex loci rei sitæ should not be regarded where it differed from the lex loci contractus et nativitatis; you decided that where the former law declared for legitimacy, it should yield to the latter, which declared for bastardy." But this is not quite a fair statement. The lex loci rei sitæ, in the cases referred to, was the law of Scotland, and it did not declare for legitimacy, because it had adopted the general rule above stated in the matter, and the lex loci nativitatis declared for bastardy. His Lordship proceeds: "How can you be called upon here to decide that the lex loci rei sitæ shall overrule the other law, and that again in favour of bastardy? I profess my inability to understand how these two decisions of the same question can in any way stand together." The answer is, that it is not the same question.

Mr. Hosack says, (p. 154), "An alien, or a person born out of the Queen's allegiance, cannot be tenant in curtesy, [by the curtesy,] unless he be either naturalised or made a denizen. The first of these privileges is now conferred by a certificate to be obtained from one of the principal Secretaries of State, [under stat. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 66]; the second, by letters-patent from the Queen. The former has the effect generally of removing all disabilities, past as well as future; the latter only from the date of the instrument." He adds, indeed, as a note to "removing all disabilities," "Vide, as exception to this rule, Cullingwood v. Pace, (Bing. 445); Fish v. Klein, (2 Mer. 431)." But his statement of the law, even with this reservation, is calculated to mislead. Acts of naturalisation have not a retrospective operation, according to the ordinary form, which is, that the alien "shall be, and is hereby from henceforth, naturalised, and shall be, to all intents and purposes, reputed and taken to be, in every condition, respect, and degree, as if he had been a natural-born subject within the United Kingdom," &c. And the stat. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 66, empowering the Secretary of State to grant certificates of naturalisation, does not appear to give more than an ordinary act of naturalisation, as it enacts, "That, upon obtaining the certificate and taking the oath hereinafter prescribed, every alien now residing &c. shall enjoy all the rights and capacities which a natural-born subject of the United Kingdom can enjoy or transmit, except," &c.

The conflict of laws sometimes renders the question of administration very complicated and difficult. We will give an example of the difficulties of this kind that we have met with in practice, in the hope that Mr. Hosack, in his second part, may furnish some help in regard to similar ones.

A., domiciled in Scotland, died, having a claim on the British Government, which was recovered some years after his death by one of his relatives, and paid to a party who took out administration in England. In consequence of the state of A.'s affairs at the time of his death, there was some doubt whether the administrator would be safe in paying any part of the money over to the next of kin of the deceased without the sanction both of the English Court of Chancery and the Scotch Court of Session. The parties interested in the fund were unwilling to incur the expense of English Chancery proceedings as well as of proceedings in the Court of Session; and one consequence of this was, that the administrator kept the fund in his hands for about ten years without paying any interest.

We wish Mr. Hosack would persuade his printer to print his marginal and foot notes in type of the size usually employed for that purpose in English law-books. We have noticed that some Scotch printers seem to think that they improve the appearance of their work by making a very striking contrast between the text and the notes—a great mistake.

As a specimen of Mr. Hosack's style, we extract from his Introduction the following passage explanatory of the nature of the subject which forms the title of his work:—

"The discussions of the jurists upon questions of international law naturally divide themselves into two great branches; the one relating to the public rights of nations, the other to the private interests of individuals. The former—such as the rights of peace and war, the interpretation of treaties, the privileges of ambassadors, and other questions directly affecting the interest and dignity of nations—must necessarily be left to the determination of the supreme government of each state; the latter—involving a consideration of the effect of foreign upon domestic laws, when these happen to be in conflict, and when the matter at issue relates solely to the rights of private persons or property—fall under the cognisance of the ordinary tribunals of justice. It is to the latter branch of this extensive subject only, and which from its nature may be denominated private international law, that it will be necessary, in the course of the following treatise, frequently to refer.

"In England, for obvious reasons, this interesting branch of jurisprudence has not assumed the same degree of importance as in various other states. But our comparatively isolated position did not prevent the introduction of the study of the law of nations at an early period of its history. In the year 1585 an Italian jurist, the most celebrated of the age, was appointed professor of jurisprudence at Oxford. He held that office for many years, and was succeeded by Dr. Zouche, a learned English civilian, who afterwards became judge of the Court of Admiralty. Sir Leoline Jenkins, whose extensive knowledge of public law was appreciated, as well in France and Holland as in his native country, next presided over the same court; and it is impossible, in referring, however cursorily, to the English jurists of the seventeenth century, to omit the name of Selden. But it was principally to questions of public law that the attention of these learned persons appears to have been directed; and it has been observed by a high authority, that the discussions of the foreign jurists on the conflict of laws generally were almost unknown in England before the time of Lord Hardwicke. This remark, however, must be received with some qualification, for there is ample evidence of the recognition, upon enlightened principles, of foreign laws in England long before the period referred to; but it may be admitted, that the eminent person last named, and after him Lords Mansfield and Stowell, three jurists of whom it would be difficult to name the most distinguished,

"From the greater infusion of Roman law into the jurisprudence of Scotland, there is found, in the earlier decisions of the Court of Session, a much more frequent reference to foreign authorities than at a corresponding period in England. The doctrines of international law, however, do not appear to have made much real progress in the former country before the middle of the last century. The publication of the ingenious treatise of Lord Kaimes about that time shews, indeed, that the subject had attracted attention; but the principles which were then allowed to regulate the most important questions of mixed rights were then but ill defined—a circumstance proved by the remarkable fluctuation which the law of international succession underwent after that period, and to which it will be necessary to refer in another part of this treatise. For practical purposes, indeed, this branch of law may be said to be of simultaneous growth in the two countries; for the jurisprudence of Scotland appears to be in many respects indebted to the same eminent jurists who first established its principles in the sister kingdom.

"But, although the labours of the learned, powerfully aided as they have been by judicial skill, have cleared away many difficulties, and fixed numerous rules for the adjustment of conflicting laws, various questions, involving interests of deep importance to society, still remain in a state of perplexing uncertainty. There is, however, one remarkable feature in the present age, by means of which it is possible that these evils may be eventually diminished, if not altogether removed. The unprecedented facility for intercourse between nations will, in all probability, render questions of foreign and conflicting laws of much more frequent occurrence. The necessity of determining these upon equitable principles must lead to a more extensive acquaintance, as well with the writings of the best authorities, as with the practice of foreign states, and an approximation may at length be made to that universal system of international comity, which it is the ultimate object of this branch of jurisprudence to establish."

RETAINER OF COUNSEL.

The following new rules of practice relating to the retainers of counsel were adopted unanimously at a special general meeting of the Incorporated Law Society, held on Wednesday, the 29th November:—

GENERAL RETAINERS.

1. That a general retainer applies to all courts in which the counsel receiving it shall practise.
2. That if the counsel should be offered a special retainer by the opponent of the party having given such general retainer, in any other court than that in which he shall usually practise, the general retainer entitles the party giving it to notice before the offered retainer is accepted.
3. That the general retainer lasts for the joint lives of the client and counsel, or so long as the counsel continues in practice, except it be lost, according to any of these rules.
4. In case a special retainer or brief is offered to counsel against the party who has given a general retainer, the counsel is at liberty to accept the special retainer or brief of the other party, unless within one week after issue joined, or replication filed, a special retainer or brief be given by the party who gave the general retainer.

5. Where a general retainer has been given and a brief is not delivered to the retained counsel in any action, suit, or other proceeding, in which the party giving the general retainer is concerned, (and pending in the court wherein the counsel usually practises), the general retainer is entirely lost, unless in cases where a brief is given to a junior counsel only, and the services of the retained counsel appear unnecessary to the retaining solicitor.

6. Where a general retainer is given for one person, and he is sued with others, and he defends separately, the retainer is binding; but it is otherwise if he defend jointly.

CORPORATION AND PARTNERSHIP RETAINERS.

7. Subject to the foregoing rules, a general retainer given for a corporation will continue, unless the corporation be dissolved, or the grant of a new charter be accepted.

8. When a general retainer is given for a partnership or firm, it continues so long as the style of the partnership or firm continues, and extends to all matters affecting the partnership, notwithstanding all the partners may not be included in the action or actions brought.

9. A general retainer may be given for a provisional committee in respect of any subject of action or suit by or against such committee, or any member or members of it, arising out of the concern in which they are provisional committeemen.

SPECIAL RETAINERS.

10. A special retainer may be given as well before as after the commencement of an action at law, or suit in equity, or a proceeding in bankruptcy.

11. A special retainer gives the client a right to the services of the counsel during the whole progress of the cause, including interlocutory applications and bills of exception and rehearsings.

12. The retained counsel is entitled to a brief on every occasion in which the case is brought before the Court in which he usually practises, except where the services of the junior counsel only appear to the retaining solicitor necessary.

CIRCUIT RETAINERS.

13. A special retainer in a country cause must be given for a particular assize.

14. If the venue be changed for another place on the same circuit, a fresh retainer is not required.

15. If the cause be not tried at the assize for which the retainer is given, the retainer must be renewed for every subsequent assize until the cause is disposed of, unless a brief has been delivered, and then the usual refresher fee is sufficient.

16. A retainer may be given for future assizes, without a retainer for the intervening assizes, unless notice of trial shall have been given for such intervening assizes.

17. Where a renewed retainer is necessary, it must be given before the end of the term preceding the assize.

18. In any case requiring the renewal of a retainer, an adverse brief or retainer cannot be accepted without notice to the original client.

APPEALS, WRITS OF ERROR, AND NONSUITS.

19. A special retainer, in an appeal, or on a writ of error, may be given before the appeal has been lodged, or the writ of error issued.

20. Counsel in the original cause cannot accept a retainer on an appeal or writ of error for the opposite party, without affording the client in such original cause the opportunity of giving such retainer.

21. After a nonsuit, a retainer cannot be accepted from the adverse party in a second action without notice to the client for whom a brief has been held in the first action.

OPINIONS AND PLEADINGS.

22. Where counsel has drawn pleadings, or advised, during the progress or in contemplation of an action or suit, a retainer cannot be accepted from, or pleadings drawn for, or advice given to, the opponent, without notice to the first client.

PROMOTION OF COUNSEL.

23. The retainer of a counsel does not cease upon his being promoted to a higher rank at the bar.

FORM OF RETAINER.—NOTICE.

24. When a retainer is given by the plaintiff in a cause A. v. B., and an action or suit is afterwards brought by B. v. A., the counsel cannot take the retainer of B. without notice to A., if the causes of action are connected.

25. A mistake in the title of an action or suit does not render the retainer inoperative, if it can be shewn that the cause of action or suit is the same, and that there is no other to which the retainer can apply.

26. The notice to the client mentioned in these rules is intended to afford him an opportunity to give a special retainer to counsel.

AMOUNT OF FEES.

27. The fees given for general retainers are as follow:
In the Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer of Pleas, five guineas.
In Chancery and Bankruptcy Appeals, five guineas.
In Bankruptcy, five guineas.
In Parliament, ten guineas.
In the Privy Council, ten guineas.

28. The fees given for special retainers are as follow:
At Common Law or in Equity, one guinea.
In Parliament, on Bills and Election Committees, five guineas.
In Appeals to the House of Lords, two guineas.
In the Privy Council, two guineas.

LAW BOOKS recently published by S. SWEET, 1, Chancery-lane; and V. and R. STEVENS & G. S. NORTON, Bell-yard, Lincoln's Inn, and 184, Fleet-street.

In 1 thick vol., 12mo., price 25s. boards.

A SUMMARY of the LAW of MODERN PLEADING, incident to the Rules of Hilary Term, 1834; with such of the Decisions on Practice, Evidence, and Costs, as are closely connected with that subject. Also, copious Analysis of the Cases and Pleadings. By ROBERTS PHILIP TYRWHITT, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law.

"The reports of the 'Common-law Commissioners' suggested extensive changes in the practice on this important subject, (Pleading), which changes, whether improvements or not, were sanctioned by Parliament, and embodied by all the common-law courts in general rules, dated Hilary Term, 1834. It was then sought to adapt old principles to modern exigencies, and to link the present with the past by regulating the transition—with what success the work before us attempts to develop. It embodies in its text the pith of the decisions on 'Modern Pleading,' as incident to the above 'rules,' and condenses in the notes other valuable matter at present spread over lengthy 'reports.' The latter feature is adapted to render the volume more extensively useful in courts of Nisi Prius, particularly on the circuits, and in the library of country practitioners. Nor is it rigorously limited to its chief object; but includes the course of decisions on the replication de injuria in extended application, as well as on the modern acts respecting land, mines, commons, ways, and easements, together with such of the law of amendment, evidence, and costs as elucidates the new rules of pleading. On the whole, this work appears to have been prepared with much care and industry, and will be found to afford in small compass a useful adjunct to the works of Stephen and Chitty."—Times, Oct. 29th, 1848.

CLERICAL, MEDICAL, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.—INVALID LIVES.

In addition to the ordinary Assurance of Healthy Lives, this Society, early in the year 1824, originated the plan of granting Policies on the Lives of Persons more or less deviating from the standard of health. Having issued one-fourth of the whole number of Policies on Lives of that description, the Board have recently caused a careful investigation into this branch of the business to be made. The result of this investigation has proved highly satisfactory as to the past, and encouraging for the future. The data, derived from long experience in this class of cases, and exclusively available by this Society, enable the Directors to state with confidence their conviction that the system now adopted by them for assuring Invalid Lives is as safe and beneficial as that upon which the scale for Healthy Lives is constructed.

The Fourth Bonus, declared January, 1847, averaged rather more than 36½ per Cent.; and, from the large amount of Profit reserved for future appropriation, and other causes, the Bonuses hereafter are expected to EXCEED that Amount.

LONDON, JANUARY 6, 1849.

THE doctrine relating to the merger of misdemeanours in felonies, if it ever existed, may be regarded as abolished by the recent and important case of Reg. v. Button and Others, (12 Jur. 1017; 18 Law Journ., N. S., M. C., 19). Prior to this decision, the authorities on the question, though few in number, were apparently opposed to each other; but the subject has at length been treated in a clear and decisive manner and disposed of in accordance with common sense and the principles of natural justice.

It was not to be tolerated that a man should be allowed to purge himself of a less offence by shewing that he had committed a greater; or that, because he was found to be more criminal than had been supposed, therefore he should be acquitted. It is true, that he might subsequently be indicted for the more serious offence, and could not plead thereto autrefois acquit of the misdemeanour; but the felony set up at the first trial might turn out on the second trial to have been a mere pretence, or the evidence might not be the same, or might not be satisfactory to the jury, or might be met by a different answer. As was said by Lord Denman, delivering judgment in the case now under our consideration, "Entire impunity has sometimes been obtained by varying the description of the offence according to the prisoner's interest, and he has been liberated on both charges solely because he was guilty on both."

The defendants in Reg. v. Button were indicted for a conspiracy to use dyeing materials in possession of their master (a dyer) on articles not entrusted to them for dyeing by the master, and so to defraud their employer. It was objected, that the misdemeanour of conspiracy merged in the felony of larceny or embezzlement; and it was assumed by the Court, that the facts shewed a felony to have been committed.

One class of authorities cited for the defence (Reg. v. Cross, 1 Ld. Raym. 711; Foster's Discourse, 3, c. 3, s. 6; Isaac's case, 2 East, P. C., c. 21, s. 8, p. 1031) were declared by the Court to be cases not of merger, but in which the offence charged was a felony, and a felony only; and, therefore, an indictment charging it as a misdemeanour of course was bad. These decisions were thus irrelevant to the question, whether, if a party be indicted for a complete misdemeanour, and it appear that he has also committed a felony comprising the misdemeanour, the one merges in the other.

Another class of authorities cited for the defence (Procter v. Darnbrook, Hob. 138) were referred to the jurisdiction now exercised by justices of oyer and terminer, who may direct one indictment to be quashed or suspended, and another preferred, as public justice may require. "But," observed Lord Denman, "the Court, by making the plaintiff prosecute for the felony before he went on with his suit, (as in Procter v. Darnbrook), gave no sanction to the notion, that the defendant has any right so to interfere, and to demand an acquittal for a manifest minor offence, upon the pretext that he has a right to direct himself to be prosecuted for a graver crime."

The Court recognised and acted upon the case of Reg. v. Neale, (1 Car. & K. 591; 1 Den. C. C. 36, S. C.), where a charge of misdemeanour, in having intercourse with a female child between the age of ten and twelve, was held proved, and the conviction maintained by the judges, although the evidence shewed that the very act charged as a misdemeanour was also the felony of rape, the argument for the prosecution being, that every material allegation in the indictment was proved, and that the verdict ought to be according to truth. It may now be considered as an established rule of law, that a misdemeanour, which is a part of a felony, may be prosecuted as a misdemeanour, though the felony has been completed.

 remarks on the proposal to give the Court jurisdiction to proceed on petition when parties consent, ib.
 cases in which this course would be very beneficial, 274 circumstances which would in equity detract from its utility, ib.
 remarks on several propositions, the effect of which would be, to give a primary jurisdiction to the Masters in certain cases in which it is now possessed by the Court, ib.
 cases in which it might be advantageous to do this, ib.
 suggestions on this subject, ib.
 remarks on the propositions with reference to the dispatch of business in the offices, ib.
 observations on the proposition, that rules should be enacted to make the giving of evidence compulsory in bankruptcy and other cases where the proceedings are on petition, ib.
 as to the suggestion of allowing affidavits to be used at the hearing of a cause, 275 further observations on the same subject, 285 principle of evidence by affidavit, ib.

 evidence which the Court wants in such cases, ib.

 this does not apply to witnesses, ib.
 a witness in Chancery stands in the same position as at law, ib.

 it would at all events secure justice, ib.
 written evidence does not elicit facts as vis à voce evidence does, ib.

CLERICAL, MEDICAL, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.—INVALID LIVES.

In addition to the ordinary Assurance of Healthy Lives, this Society, early in the year 1824, originated the plan of granting Policies on the Lives of Persons more or less deviating from the standard of health. Having issued one-fourth of the whole number of Policies on Lives of that description, the Board have recently caused a careful investigation into this branch of the business to be made. The result of this investigation has proved highly satisfactory as to the past, and encouraging for the future. The data, derived from long experience in this class of cases, and exclusively available by this Society, enable the Directors to state with confidence their conviction that the system now adopted by them for assuring Invalid Lives is as safe and beneficial as that upon which the scale for Healthy Lives is constructed.

The Fourth Bonus, declared January, 1847, averaged rather more than 30l. per Cent.; and, from the large amount of Profit reserved for future appropriation, and other causes, the Bonuses hereafter are expected to EXCEED that Amount.
